OUR 70TH YEAR, NO. 22

PICO BLANCO, Monterey County, California, was the Ansel Adams photograph used by the deputy attorney general who represented the State of California in his attempt to convince a federal district court judge to require Granite Rock Co. to get a state coastal permit before the company proceeds with its mining operations on federally-owned Pico Blanco property. The deputy attorney general said the submission of the photograph for use by the state was one of Adams' last acts on behalf of environmental causes before he died. For full coverage, see page 20. (Photograph by Ansel Adams. Courtesy of the Ansel Adams Publishing rights trust. All rights reserved.)

Supervisor candidates in final stretch

By JOE LIVERNOIS

FIFTH DISTRICT supervisorial candidates will enter the home stretch of their colorful campaign this weekend before the June 5 election and, once it is over, the sheer entertainment of their forums will surely be missed by voters.

By June 5, the five supervisorial candidates will have spoken, argued, baited, yelled, laughed and debated with each other at least a dozen times in various forums during the past two months.

Last week, the five got together in Carpenter Hall in Sunset Center for a 90-minute forum sponsored by the Carmel Citizens Committee which was attended by about 60 persons.

As usual, each candidate insisted there were plenty of serious issues to discuss. But, also as usual, they spent much of their time last week taking pot shots at each other.

In particular, candidates Ed Lee and Neill Gardner have been on the offensive throughout the campaign and they did not let up at all at the Carmel Citizens Committee forum last week.

Lee called the other candidates "chameleons" and Gardner opened the meeting with witty attacks on his opponents.

He referred to Lee, a Carmel resident, as a man who "belongs to more volunteer outfits than Lady Bird Johnson."

He accused Howard Brunn of Carmel of flip-flopping on issues Gardner considers the most important, a new dam on the Carmel River and construction of Hatton Canyon Freeway.

He called Karin Strasser Kauffman "the lady with two last names" who is "afraid someone might build a house" in Monterey County.

Gardner admitted Dortha Roesler of Toro Park Estates "is the only one in the bunch that makes a lick of sense" but added that she is "not equipped to play hard ball in Salinas."

Mrs. Roesler responded by waving a stack of letters to the editor she has written over the past decade and told the audience of about 60 Carmel residents "I'm going to beat (Gardner) up with my purse if he says that again."

Mrs. Roesler did not otherwise attack her fellow candidates with much vigor last week, but she did call a county employees union representative a "dingbat."

THE PERSONAL affronty appears to have surfaced in the campaign since it has become quite evident the five differ little on the major issues.

All five said they support construction of Hatton Canyon Freeway. They all believe voters in the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District should vote on a bond proposal to finance construction of a dam on the San Clemente site of the Carmel River.

They all believe growth should not be limited by limitation of services and, instead, responsible growth in the county should be directed through land use plans and policies.

The forum last week did uncover one issue that differentiated several of the candidates, however.

Gardner said he would support the immediate disbanding of the water management district. He does not believe the district should be disbanded — yet. "It's premature at this time," he said. "But if you haven't voted on a dam in two years, I think people in the district should seriously consider it."

Mrs. Strasser Kauffman and Brunn both supported the district. Brunn said the district is now starting to thrive after it had "some growing pains" and is important because it puts water use decisions "back in the hands of the people. You will decide on the dam."

Mrs. Strasser Kauffman said that while she supports a residents' vote on a dam, she believes water supply problems on the Monterey Peninsula are "more complex than just a dam. I think the water district should move rapidly, but carefully."

Lee called the other candidates 'chameleons' and Gardner opened the meeting with witty attacks on his opponents.

The Fifth District supervisor traditionally has been a seventh member of the water district board of directors and Gardner, a Monterey resident, said he believes the water district board should be "replaced with an organization with a purpose, the purpose being to build a dam."

Mrs. Roesler chimed in that Gardner's answer was "music to my ears" and added that "I'd like to see the water board put down somebody's drain."

Lee, a member of the water board, said he

THE CANDIDATES also differentiated themselves when they were asked if they believe the supervisorial administration of human services is as important as consideration of land use issues.

Lee said he believes that "it is up to county government staff to" administer social service programs and that a supervisor "doesn't necessarily need to stick their nose in all that."

Lee, Brunn and Roesler all said land use issues are the most serious issues supervisors must handle.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letters to the editor are welcome. Views on all matters are acceptable, following the guidelines of good taste. While there is no limit on length, brevity is encouraged. Letters are subject to editing for style and length. Each letter must contain name, address and signature. A phone number is needed for verification only. Anonymous letters are not accepted.

More on erosion

Dear Editor:

Mr. Livernois' article of May 17 regarding the MPWMD meeting (Boronda Erosion Control Project) is nonfactual. He quotes Mr. Scudder's letter, yet he neglected to get a statement from Trail and Saddle Club directors who were present.

We respect Mr. Scudder's right to his own opinion, but we resent Mr. Livernois' failure to find out that riverbank reinforcement undertaken on club property has been directed to the building up of washed-out areas.

This has not intruded into the bed of the river, nor has it artificially altered the normal river channel flow along our perimeter or beyond. The club grounds have been inundated by flood before, and that may happen again in a wet year, because we have no such alleged enormous "levee."

In fact, our main objections to the MPWMD project is our concern for what will happen to properties and bridges downstream if the proposed concrete revetments are placed to straighten the natural river curves and confine the mainstream of the riverbed along the two-mile stretch. Whatever changes occur in the height and velocity of water flow will directly affect the entire length of the river, and must be clarified in a total environmental impact report by a qualified hydrologist.

We realize that some of our neighbors desperately need assistance with severe erosion difficulties, but such a program has to be incorporated in a total plan. Otherwise it may create much more serious problems than it solves.

Besides, the MPWMD staff has admitted that their project has no guarantees. It may or may not work for erosion control, but definitely is not expected to withstand a flood situation. Apparently the landowners would be liable for their assessments in the event that a flood wipes out the whole project before it is even paid for in full.

The actual cost to each landowner is not $4.67/linear foot as reported, but would range from $15.12-$19.15/linear foot, not including possible future maintenance costs. We believe this is an excessive financial burden for an experiment which may keep regenerating itself and could force drastic, expensive measures to be taken downriver.

The Trail and Saddle Club will continue to provide a convenient location for MPWMD meetings on this subject. We urge all involved property owners to attend the protest hearing on Monday, June 4, at 7:30 p.m. in our clubhouse.

Many foundation activities

Dear Editor:

The Pine Cone provided an excellent service to the community in its May 10 issue by printing Sunset Center's recreation schedule and other recreational opportunities for the residents of Carmel and its environs.

The purpose of this letter is to correct and to amplify the statement that "The Carmel Foundation offers activities from time to time as they are announced and scheduled." Actually, the Carmel Foundation is open seven days a week: Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Saturday and Sunday from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

The weekday program includes approximately 40 regularly scheduled classes per week in sewing, current events, exercise, languages, art, photography, bridge, etc. Weekend open house offers games, refreshments and sociability. Any of the many classes taught by either the Carmel Adult Education department or Monterey Peninsula College accredited staff are open to the public upon payment of their low fees. There will be no fee for Monterey Peninsula College summer classes this year. The foundation serves a delicious a la carte luncheon for members four days a week, and every Wednesday afternoon there is a cultural program followed by tea.

Of great interest to residents of this area is the news that the newly-organized Carmel Recreation Department will provide free transportation for seniors to Seaside's beautiful new pool on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Swimming is also free for seniors from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays and bus transportation will depart the foundation's parking lot at the southeast corner of Eighth and Lincoln on these days at 12:30 p.m. with return by 2:30 p.m., beginning on Monday, June 18 and ending on Friday, Aug. 24.

Registration forms are available in the foundation reception area. Non-swimmers can avail themselves of a warm, waist-high therapy pool for beneficial exercise. Persons with arthritis particularly benefit from the therapy pool.

Membership in the Carmel Foundation is open to all persons 55 years of age or older.

Vote for Brunn

Dear Editor:

Howard Brunn will make a fine member of the board of supervisors simply because his record as a Carmel councilman proved, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that he is a very rare public servant.

How many Monterey County supervisors do you know who are truly thinking of ways to represent the taxpayers who voted them into office? How many public servants do you know who vote the way the majority would vote? How many public servants do you know who are thinking of traffic congestion on Highway 1 and the Carmel Valley Road and what it will be like in another 10 years?

Howard Brunn, who has lived in the Carmel area all his life, knows first-hand about the problems all of us in the Fifth District face, and what's more, he will represent the best interests of all the people. Howard did this before and he will do it again. Because of this, he should have your vote.

Supports Karin Kauffman

Dear Editor:

I am not one to write letters to the editor but I certainly endorse Karin Strasser Kauffman for Fifth District supervisor for Monterey County. She is an excellent administrator.

If Karin doesn't know the answer to some problems, which would surprise me, she has the inquisitiveness, perseverance, and the will to follow through to get the answer. Her interest in Monterey County government and the all-important budget process is of long standing and is well known.

She has been active on many Monterey County committees and certainly has a grasp of all problems in county government.

Karin is not locked into preconceived ideas but has an open mind and can quickly see all sides of a question and come to an honest and fair conclusion to a problem.

The voters of the Fifth District of Monterey County would certainly benefit by electing Karin Strasser Kauffman to the board of supervisors.

Foster, Villa, Herman

Dear Editor:

In my view, the issue concerning our airport on the June 5 primary ballot is clear.

Three incumbent directors — Patricia Faul, Thomas Drakes and Dick Searle — say multi-million dollar expansion projects set to get underway are for noise and safety.

In reality, however, the projects are a long-time dream of growth promoters on the peninsula. They are: 1) extension of the main runway from 6,600 feet to 7,600 feet; 2) closing an old general aviation runway and building a new general aviation runway and new general aviation facilities; and, 3) building an aviation and commercial development on 150 acres of airport property.

Do these projects sound like noise and safety?

Hotel developers and outside big business interests support the airport projects; neighborhood groups and a number of city officials oppose them. The expansion projects are clearly a growth issue.

In addition to the incumbents, candidates Anne Ball and Tom Larson support aviation growth.

Only three candidates for airport board are solidly opposed to the expansion — Bill Foster, Dan Villa and Robert Herman. Bill Foster is a businessman who lives in Carmel, Dan Villa is a planning commissioner and Robert Herman is a retired businessman, commercial pilot and electronics engineer.

I believe the Monterey Peninsula Airport should be improved, not expanded. I'm voting to unseat the incumbents, and voting for Foster, Villa and Herman.

No airport expansion

Dear Editor:

It seems the new air-conditioned Sheraton Hotel will be opening this fall about the same time the three incumbent airport directors running for re-election on June 5 want to start making the runway at our airport longer than LaGuardia and National Airport in Washington, D.C. and John Wayne, to name a few.

I suppose large air-conditioned international hotels do need airports that can handle the largest jets in the world, but we don't. All we need is the more than adequate feeder airport we have right now together with less "touch and go" and strict enforcement of current flight patterns. This is the real way to reduce noise.

Bill Foster, Dan Villa and Bob Herman agree and are running as a slate for the five-member airport board on June 5. They don't believe the expansion projects approved by the present board are necessary and are pledged to revoke them. Give them your vote.

Ed Leeper

Karin has understanding

Dear Editor:

Modern politics seems to foster moral mediocrity, and as the Fifth District race heats up, the above appears to be true. We are all extremists in one way or another, but surely it is possible for candidates to behave in a more civilized fashion, without resorting to innuendo.

The littering of residential areas with self-proclaiming advertising implies a lack of intelligence to understand any issue, beyond the name of the candidates.

The position of Fifth District supervisor is being pursued to such extremes of bad taste. Those who are fed up with politics may well say: "To heck with it."

Dissension and criticism have been the hallmarks of this district for some time. Let's not vulgarize the spirit of residents any further and let some of the area's natural beauty permeate the political scene.

I support Karin Strasser Kauffman for the Fifth District, not that she has a monopoly on virtue or wisdom, but simply because she has a thorough understanding of the complexities of the area and the ability to work with the board.

Retain airport directors

Dear Editor:

We, as residents of the Monterey Peninsula, are fortunate to have a well-run airport that is self-supporting, off the tax roll, due to the thoughtful guidance from the directors of the airport board. They have made wise decisions in terms of air service, safety, and noise abatement with careful consideration to our quality of life.

The present board plans to implement noise abatement laws to comply with PUC regulations effective January 1986. Failure to comply would result in loss of the operating permit and closure of the airport.

The planned extension of the runway to comply with the regulations will reduce noise to areas near the airport as well as Monterey and Pacific Grove. The extension of the runway to the east will allow more takeoffs to the east, reducing noise to density areas. Takeoffs to the west will place aircraft higher over populated areas. Approaches over Pacific Grove and Monterey will be higher, quieter and safer with the extended runway.

After reading the ANCLUC (Airport Noise and Land Use Compatibility) report and the EIR, one realizes the thoughtful consideration the present airport board has given to combining the welfare of our community with the State of California's airport regulations.

The coalition trying to block the airport board's plans for improvement and compliance is putting a bad face on good facts by terming it "expansion." The coalition sidesteps the issues of noise abatement, safety and regulations that must be met to keep the airport operating.

As a community, our best interests will be served to re-elect chairwoman Patricia Faul and the other incumbent directors, Searle and Drake, in the June 5 election. They have served us faithfully and caringly. They deserve our support.

Big Brother's here

Dear Editor:

1984, that year of George Orwell's anti-utopian vision, has arrived with Big Brother watching over everyone and leading us with all manner of slogans, guidelines, rules, regulations and laws.

Orwell's novel describes the real world of billions behind the various curtains. These totalitarian regimes routinely oppress their citizenry, distort or conceal information, and violate every tenet of human justice.

In the name of peace, chemical warfare is waged on primitive villagers, and passenger airliners are shot down in the night. But worst of all in this Orwellian nightmare is to see the victims declared as criminals while Big Brother is portrayed as the friend of all peace-loving people.

Although a limited government such as ours is a valued servant in keeping the peace and securing justice, it can all too easily be transformed into a Big Brother, omnipotent state. As a possessor of monopoly power by the use of force, government poses a constant threat to individual freedom.

Only a voluntary free market economy based on the concept of individual freedom and private property can counter-balance government's monopoly over the use of force to implement its desires.

The best hope for avoidance of a 1984-style future for ourselves is by demanding more individual freedom and responsibility for our lives instead of allowing government to herd us from womb to tomb.

Strasser Kauffman for supervisor

AN ABUNDANCE of candidates for Monterey County Fifth District supervisor confronts voters in the June 5 election. Perhaps the single most important criterion for evaluating these candidates is how well each would serve the total public interest, as opposed to personal or special interests.

Especially in light of recent political history in the Fifth District, responsive and responsible public service is a major concern in this election. In fact, this single issue overshadows other important issues of land use, growth and development, environmental protection, and coastal planning.

And voters who live in the Carmel/Carmel Valley area should look at the five candidates not only in terms of how effective each would be in serving the public interest, but especially residents of the immediate area.

There is no doubt that all five candidates — Ed Lee of Carmel, Howard Brunn of Carmel, Karin Strasser Kauffman of Carmel Valley, Dortha Roesler of Toro Park, and Neill Gardner of Monterey — are sincere in their motives. Each is pledged to serve the interests of the public — as they perceive them — if elected.

Thus, the real consideration becomes which of the five candidates has the broadest perspective of public service, the right motivation, and the ability to place principles before personalities in all county affairs.

While the five candidates represent somewhat different points on the political spectrum — from conservative to liberal, from conservationist to pro-growth — their public pronouncements on the issues have had an amazingly similar ring. With the possible exception of whether to proceed with a large new dam on the Carmel River, the candidates all have adopted a cautious, conciliatory, and somewhat baffling uniformity on the issues.

Perhaps as a result of this sameness, some rather nasty attacks have occurred by candidates, one against the other. Ed

Lee has accused Karin Strasser Kauffman of using deceptive tactics in her advertising and of practicing "coalition politics;" Dortha Roesler has attacked Mrs. Strasser Kauffman for using truck billboard advertising — exactly what Mrs. Roesler has used herself.

None of this has brought much glory or honor to the campaign, and has tested the patience of voters who otherwise would have a great deal of interest in the outcome of this election.

There's a lot at stake. The Carmel Valley Master Plan, which will guide Valley growth for the next 20 years, is all but complete but the makeup of the board of supervisors in the coming years will determine to a large extent the equity and even-handedness with which the plan is implemented. Decisions still must be made about land use based on the plan.

A sense of bitterness and frustration among citizens toward their elected and appointed officials in Salinas has become obvious in recent years, particularly in the Fifth District, and much work needs to be done to overcome this if county government is to function smoothly and effectively.

And the makeup of county boards and commissions, although not as far-reaching a concern as land use and environmental issues, is another area that can and should be addressed by the newly-elected supervisor to reflect all interests and points of view in the Fifth District.

Among the five candidates, there is one whose attitudes, motivation, and competence seem extraordinarily well suited to the task at hand. Karin Strasser Kauffman has done her homework; she is well-acquainted with the issues; she has worked for more than a year to secure the Fifth District position because she wants to serve and to help restore public confidence in government.

Therefore, Karin Strasser Kauffman is imminently well qualified for the office and deserves the votes of all Fifth District residents.

Carmel Heritage Society looking for vacant lot

THE CARMEL Heritage Society wants a lot!

That is the new motto adopted by the Heritage Society after a house was donated to the group with the stipulation that members relocate the building.

Joe and Pat McEldowney of Hatton Fields have offered to donate to the Heritage Society an approximately 75-year-old, single-story building on the west side of Junipero Avenue between Fifth and Fourth avenues.

The McEldowneys hope to develop a seven-unit condominium project on the 7,100 sq. ft. lot that now houses the Freeze Voter '84 headquarters. The proposal is to be presented to the planning commission in June.

If the condominium project is approved, the McEldowneys plan to give the house to the Carmel Heritage Society to use as a museum if a lot can be found. They also promise to help pay for moving the house.

But the donation depends on whether the city allows the condominium project. Otherwise, the McEldowneys probably will continue to rent the building as office space, Joe McEldowney told the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook May 17.

The potential donation of the house created the Heritage Society motto of "We want a lot."

The Heritage Society plans to ask the city for permission to locate the building at the rear of Piccadilly Park, west side of Dolores Street between Ocean and Seventh avenues.

That proposal is expected to be presented to the city council June 5.

"You hate to have something tied up in your family for so many years be destroyed," McEldowney said. "If they can use it, great. It's just going to be bulldozed."

To the best of McEldowney's recollection, the house was built around 1915 by the Pacific Improvement Company. That company's foreman lived there for many years.

A few years later McEldowney's grandmother, Julia Ammerman, rented it from Dr. J. E. Beck. Dr. Beck was one of the first physicians in Carmel and was McEldowney's uncle by marriage.

McEldowney was born in 1921 in a house just two doors down from the building. He has a photograph of himself as a child in front of the building.

Fresh out of high school, McEldowney bought the house from Dr. Beck's estate in 1939 and paid it off while serving as a sergeant during World War II.

McEldowney, who never has lived in the house, rented the building to several different families up until the 1970s.

ALBERT LeBLANC bids adieu to Gunnar Norberg before he mounts his bicycle and heads south for the Olympics in Los Angeles. LeBlanc, a Quebec bartender, hopes to use letters of introduction he has received from

48 United States governors during his two-year tour of America to get two free tickets to the Olympics from Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley. (Photograph by Weiss Norberg.)

Globe-girdling bicyclist charms on Carmel visit

By JOE LIVERNOIS

FROM HIS PERCH atop his bicycle seat, Albert LeBlanc literally watches the globe spin around.

LeBlanc is an Olympian globe-trotter from the province of Quebec, a Pendleton-clad stranger who considers himself the world's best friend.

On his crudely-built bicycle, LeBlanc has pedaled the world over several times. He has stuck a spinning globe on the handlebars of the bike as a constant reminder of where he has been and where he is going.

On May 24, the personable French Canadian chanced upon the Carmel home of Weiss and Gunnar Norberg.

He noticed the tear-drop trailer in the Norberg's driveway, knocked on their door, told Weiss of his epic journeys and asked to spend the night in the trailer.

Like the thousands of others who have answered the door for LeBlanc, Mrs. Norberg was at first skeptical. But his impeccable manner and the smile in his eyes convinced Mrs. Norberg that LeBlanc was a bona fide nice guy.

LeBlanc has attended every Olympic opening ceremony — except last year in Moscow — for the past 28 years and he never has paid admission.

Instead, LeBlanc earns his way in by pedaling his bicycle around the sponsoring country. Along the way, he stops in state capitals and receives letters of recommendation from the various political leaders addressed to the mayor of the Olympic city.

And when he finally arrives in the city, he presents the letters to the mayor and asks for two free tickets to the opening ceremonies — one for himself and the other for his wife, Rita, back home in Canada.

In 1982, he departed his Canadian home and has received letters from 48 governors. He visited some personally; others did not have time for him. He keeps the letters in a scrapbook he guards with his life.

Another notebook is filled with postcards and photographs of his hosts along the way. He depends upon the kindness of strangers. So far this year, he has filled 14 notebooks. The Norbergs signed a page of the 15th note book, in which LeBlanc had pasted post cards of the Carmel Mission and an aerial shot of Carmel Bay.

"I'm an ambassador of good will," LeBlanc said.

HIS EXPERIENCES in the homes of the people he visits along the way are warm-hearted, he said.

It's not always that way with the politicians. "See this jerk from South Dakota?" he told the Norbergs who marveled at his governor's scrapbook. "I couldn't get nothing from him."

He couldn't get nothing from Ronald Reagan and George Deukmejian either. More jerks, as far as LeBlanc is concerned.

"I was able to get the personal signature of Khomeini of Iran," he said. "I met him and he signed my book, which is better than what I could get from Reagan."

School district looks to the future

WHAT WILL students need to know in the year 2000?

That is what the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education wants to find out with a little help from the community.

School officials would like to organize a "Project 2000" committee of staff, parents and community members that would design a curriculum for the year 2000 based on the socioeconomic growth and trends in the school district.

The Project 2000 committee is to meet for a series of workshops in June with the idea in mind to prepare long-range curriculum recommendations for school board consideration.

"We want community involvement. It is the community's responsibility to decide what kind of program we want to have," Director of Instruction Rich Hawkins told the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook May 18.

"We'll be using teachers, we will be using reports, we'll be using some consultants and we'll be using a lot of community opinion," said Hawkins, who is in charge of Project 2000.

"The basic outcome in my mind is we would like to come up with a list of important concepts in planning our programs for the future," he continued.

Hawkins does not expect the recommendations to focus on immediate goals.

"They can be difficult and complicated goals in that they would take several years. It's a think tank, so to speak. It's not expected to have any practical immediate effect," he said.

Hawkins would like to see a variety of people serve with Project 2000, including representatives from the business community and Monterey Peninsula College.

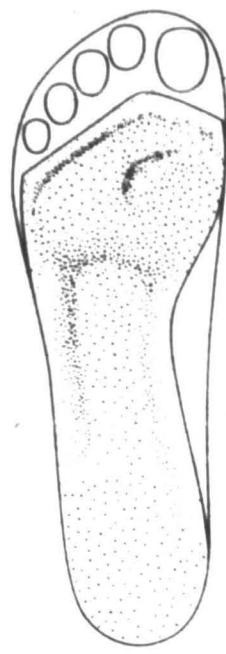

"We're interested in anyone who has something to offer and wants to help," Hawkins said.

The subjects of the series of June workshops will span such topics as global futures, the national reform reports, local futures, and essential learning skills.

The school board has approved the Project 2000 and allocated $3,500 for consultant fees.

A report is expected to be presented to trustees in early September. The report will be the subject of several meetings at different schools this fall.

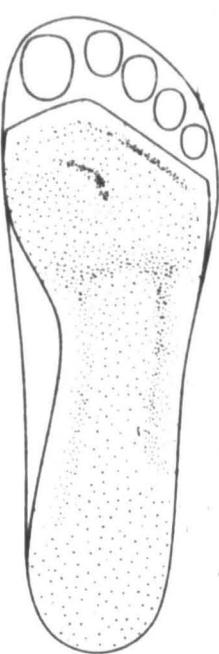

Persons interested in working with Project 2000 should contact Supt. William Rand or Hawkins by June 1 at 624-1546.

On the page on which Reagan was to sign, LeBlanc has, instead, a Canadian newspaper photograph of Reagan visiting a large pig.

"He won't talk to me and I came to his doorstep," LeBlanc laughed. "But he'll go all the way to Ottawa to talk to a pig."

He got the shaft from the Duke, too.

"See this guy? That's Big Jim Thompson, the governor of Illinois. Now that was a nice man. When I got this signature, his tie was loose and he was standing around talking to a bunch of children. He told me, 'Sure, Alberto, I'll sign your book.' Shook his hand and everything."

Even if the governor is inaccessible,

LeBlanc manages to get a secretary to write a letter of introduction signed by the governor. Each letter is affixed with the state seal — except the letter from Maine, where the governor is also a jerk.

LeBlanc told the Norbergs that theirs was not the first door he knocked on. Before the Norbergs, he asked a priest who answered the door at the Carmel Mission rectory for a place to sleep.

"The priest who answered told me, 'Well, I'm just on vacation here and I really don't know what I can tell you,'" LeBlanc said incredulously. "Can you imagine that?"

Summer writers' camp to be offered

THE MONTHS AHEAD offer reams of summer camps, tennis camps, computer camps and baseball camps. And, for the first time in Carmel Valley, local teenagers will be able to go to "writers' camp."

Lynda Marin, who co-authored Writing, a Sourcebook of Exercises and Assignments, has scheduled a writers' camp in her Carmel Valley home this summer.

The camp will feature "provocative writing exercises" for writers aged 12 to 18 "who'd like to spend a month of mornings developing their writing skills beyond the requirements of the average school curriculum," she said.

During the month, which begins June 25, "writers at camp will experiment with writing various forms of poetry, drama, fiction and nonfiction," she said, and writing exercises "will help writers to locate their own most meaningful topics and to discover a range of stylistic options for expressing them."

Campers will be able to do independent writing, participate in workshops, practice interpretive reading of original work and use a word-processor to prepare a manuscript for publication.

"The primary goal of all these activities is to put students in touch with the richness of imagination, the power of language and the pleasure of the writing process," she said.

Ms. Marin has taught writing skills for 15 years and presently teaches three writing courses at Monterey Peninsula College. From 1970 to 1981, she taught seventh through 12th grade English at the Oakwood School in Los Angeles.

Her book was published by Addison-Wesley in 1977.

Fifth District voters to pick supervisor June 5

Gardner said the administration of services is important and he believes the most serious service needs in Monterey County are more water and more highways.

Mrs. Strasser Kauffman, on the other hand, said she believes that while land use issues are important, "the supervisor's job deals primarily with human services."

She noted that two-thirds of the county budget is devoted to human services programs "and if the supervisor doesn't stick her nose into it to make sure it is being spent properly, no one will on behalf of the public."

Basically, however, most candidates agree that personal style and management skills should be the most important ingredient voters should look for in a supervisor.

Lee, for instance, called himself a "horned toad," and his opponents "chameleons trying to look like a horned toad."

He said that while he has steadfastly maintained a position on most of the existing big issues, the others have not taken the same position until recently.

He pointed out that Brunn supported Measure A, the controversial land use plan for Monterey County voters turned down two years ago, and that Mrs. Strasser Kauffman summoned support from 21 major proponents of Measure A during her campaign.

Gardner also accused Brunn, Lee and Mrs. Strasser Kauffman of changing their minds on the big issues as election time approaches.

NEITHER BRUNN nor Mrs. Strasser Kauffman attacked their opponents by name, though Mrs. Strasser Kauffman said she believes the style of her opponents' campaigns indicate they would foster "divisiveness" among board members if

Lee, a member of the water board, said he does not believe the district should be disbanded — yet. It's premature at this time. But if you haven't voted on a dam in two years, I think people in the district should seriously consider it.'

they were elected.

Monterey County Registrar of Voters Ross Underwood said he expects a 62 percent turnout countywide for the primary election.

Underwood said he expects fewer

Republicans than Democrats will turn out because Ronald Reagan is running unopposed on the Republican ballot while the Democratic presidential primary race is red hot.

That might not help Ed Lee, who has actively solicited the vote of Republicans with a "Dear Fellow Republican" letter sent to registered Republicans in the district by his campaign chairman Peter Wright.

Another letter sent by Lee asked the "moderate majority" of Fifth District voters to support his efforts to "defeat the extremist coalition's candidate."

Lee identified that candidate at several meetings as Mrs. Strasser Kauffman.

In the primary election, a candidate for supervisor must receive more than 50 percent of the vote.

If no candidate emerges with a majority, the top two vote-getters will continue the campaign for the November general election.

Carmel students do well in state testing results

TEST SCORE results can be interpreted in several different ways. But no matter which way you look at it, Carmel High School seniors did exceptionally well on the latest California Assessment Program (CAP) test.

Carmel seniors scored well in all three different areas used to judge the CAP results: the "raw percentage correct" results, comparison to all districts in the state and comparison to "like" districts, Director of Instruction Rich Hawkins told the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook last week.

In the "raw percentage correct" category, Carmel seniors scored 72.8 in reading, 71.8 in writing, 74.9 in spelling, and 79.1 in math.

Those results means that Carmel High School students as a whole got seven out of 10 questions right on the test.

No other district in the area (Monterey, Pacific Grove and Salinas) scored higher than Carmel in any of the subjects.

In comparison with all of the 500 school districts in the state, Carmel scored in the 94th percentile or better in each category.

Carmel seniors scored in the 98th percentile in reading, 97th percentile in writing, 94th percentile in spelling and 98th percentile in math.

But Hawkins does not think the raw percentage correct score or the comparison to all districts is a fair indicator of the achievements of Carmel students or any students for that matter.

Hawkins said one problem with the raw percentage correct score is that the test difficulty is not measured. The test, or subject areas, could be too difficult or too easy.

"In house" tests given by teachers is a better indication of achievement levels because then the difficulty level is known, he said.

And comparisons to all districts is not an adequate reflection, even though Carmel did well in that category, Hawkins said.

"A small district like ours that is fairly homogeneous has an advantage over a district like, say, San Jose that has a mixture of students and has 10 high schools," Hawkins said.

Instead, Hawkins said that a more accurate reflection of how well Carmel students did on the test is the "median band" category that compares the local school with other similar districts such as Palo Alto and Beverly Hills.

"Like" districts are those with similar social characteristics and the same levels of family education, he said.

CARMEL SCORED at the top or above each "median band," he said.

In reading, Carmel scored 72.8 compared to the median band scores of 68 to 71.4. In writing, Carmel scored 71.8 compared to the median band of 68.4 to 72.0.

In spelling, Carmel scored 74.9 compared to a median band of 71.9 to 75.3. And in math, Carmel scored 79.1 compared to the median band of 73.2 to 77.0.

In a comparison to last year's results, Carmel seniors improved in the areas of reading, writing and math. But their "raw percentage correct" scores in spelling fell by two percentage points.

Hawkins explained that through the past four years Carmel's results have fluctuated by a couple of percentage points.

Library trustees reluctant to pay for drawings

By JOE LIVERNOIS

CARMEL LIBRARY trustees told the Carmel City Council they do not want to commit library funds for a conceptual drawing of a proposed library expansion project.

The Harrison Memorial Library Board of Trustees agreed last week to tell the city it does not believe it can "legitimately obligate" money from its trust fund budget for drawings of the proposed library expansion on Lincoln Street.

The city council is scheduled to consider the letter at 4 p.m. June 5 in city hall.

The city council on May 5 authorized the library board to hire an architect to develop conceptual drawings for the library annex on Lincoln Street between Ocean and Sixth avenues.

But the library board responded at its May 22 meeting with the letter that opposes the use of library funds to pay for the drawings.

Trustees said that while they are not particularly against the westward expansion of the library, they are against spending money on the conceptual design work.

In addition, trustees last week voiced opposition to possible plans by the city to move some library services in city hall. The city is interested in moving city hall into the Carmel Presbyterian Church building if the church moves. If the city does move to the church, city council members have said the library could move some of its services to city hall rather than build an annex. But church officials indicated last week they do not want to move.

"We're not in favor of moving down to city hall," said Bernard Anderson, library board president. He said the board believes the building was not constructed to handle the weight of books and that it would not be possible to build access for handicapped persons at the city hall site.

Since the plans of Presbyterian Church of ficials were vague at the time, the city council told the library board to go ahead with conceptual design work for the Lincoln Street expansion proposal.

The library board has demurred — but not because it is particularly against the idea. "It's a question of money," said board president Bernard Anderson. "We felt we were not really justified in obligating trust funds."

On the other hand, Dr. Harold Englund, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, announced that a vote of his congregation indicated it wished to keep the church at its present location.

Church officials "requested the City of Carmel to give no further consideration to the purchase of the church property." (See related story, this issue.)

THE BOARD also discussed the possible move of city hall to the church building and agreed it does not want the city to consider library expansion plans along with it.

"It would mean another delay of four or five years," Anderson said. "That's absolutely out of the question."

At the same time, trustees noted they did not oppose the western addition to the existing library building — but they do not believe they should pay for the conceptual drawings.

Money for the drawings would come from a trust fund the library has set aside for capital improvements at the library.

The current fund balance is about $900,000.

Last year, the board had spent $52,000 from the fund on conceptual drawings for a library annex it had planned to build on the northwest corner of Lincoln and Sixth, but those plans died when the city council ended the project.

Anderson admitted the library board was tentative about spending more money on plans the city council might again veto.

A commitment from the city could help. "Anything that will lead to a firm contract, we're willing to spend money for," Anderson said. "But there are too many indeterminates in this. We just don't feel we can legitimately obligate trust fund money for it."

The city council has expressed interest in purchasing the church and moving city hall there. Then the library children's department, technical services and storage could be located to the present city hall site on the west side of Monte Verde Street between Ocean and Seventh avenues.

But since officials of the Presbyterian Church have never indicated whether the church property should be sold, the council agreed to ask them — and to move ahead on the western expansion of the existing library.

Anderson said he believes the library board and the city council can work out their differences about who will pay for the conceptual drawings of the Lincoln Street plans.

"We're in the process of determining what the architect's costs will be," said Anderson. "The cost could run into a sizeable amount."

Several months after the city council shelved the trustees' plans for the annex on Lincoln and Sixth, the library board agreed to spend about $150,000 of its trust account money to computerize its check-out system.

The city is interested in moving city hall into the Carmel Presbyterian Church building if the church moves. If the city does move to the church, city council members have said the library could move some of its services to city hall rather than build an annex. But church officials indicated last week they do not want to move.

"We're not in favor of moving down to city hall," said Bernard Anderson, library board president. He said the board believes the building was not constructed to handle the weight of books and that it would not be possible to build access for handicapped persons at the city hall site.

Since the plans of Presbyterian Church of pastor of the Presbyterian Church, announced that a vote of his congregation indicated it wished to keep the church at its present location.

Church officials "requested the City of Carmel to give no further consideration to the purchase of the church property." (See related story, this issue.)

The library board has demurred — but not because it is particularly against the idea. It's a question of money. We felt we were not really justified in obligating trust funds.'

Official were vague at the time, the city council told the library board to go ahead with conceptual design work for the Lincoln Street expansion proposal.

The library board has demurred — but not because it is particularly against the idea. "It's a question of money," said board president Bernard Anderson. "We felt we were not really justified in obligating trust funds."

On the other hand, Dr. Harold Englund,

Anderson admitted the library board was tentative about spending more money on plans the city council might again veto.

A commitment from the city could help. "Anything that will lead to a firm contract, we're willing to spend money for," Anderson said. "But there are too many indeterminates in this. We just don't feel we can legitimately obligate trust fund money for it."

The city council has expressed interest in purchasing the church and moving city hall there. Then the library children's department, technical services and storage could be located to the present city hall site on the west side of Monte Verde Street between Ocean and Seventh avenues.

But since officials of the Presbyterian Church have never indicated whether the church property should be sold, the council agreed to ask them — and to move ahead on the western expansion of the existing library.

Anderson said he believes the library board and the city council can work out their differences about who will pay for the conceptual drawings of the Lincoln Street plans.

"We're in the process of determining what the architect's costs will be," said Anderson. "The cost could run into a sizeable amount."

Several months after the city council shelved the trustees' plans for the annex on Lincoln and Sixth, the library board agreed to spend about $150,000 of its trust account money to computerize its check-out system.

Presbyterian church won't sell its property to city

THE FIRST "domino" has fallen in the Carmel City Council master plan for city building projects, and that doesn't necessarily spell good news for the city.

The Carmel Presbyterian Church session — its local governing body — voted May 21 not to sell the church property at the southeast corner of Ocean and Junipero avenues.

The council has investigated the possibility of buying the church property for use as a city hall. Under that scheme, city hall then could be used as an annex to Harrison Memorial Library.

City Administrator Doug Schmitz plans to bring the city hall remodeling/location issue up to the council during budget hearings in early June.

The council is to discuss how to pay for the library annex plans when it meets at 4 p.m. June 5 at city hall. (See related story, this issue.)

In a press release issued May 29, the church announced that the session "voted to inform the city council of Carmel that for the foreseeable future, the church will remain at its present location. The session requested the city of Carmel to give no further consideration to the purchase of the church property."

The church property is valued in excess of $1 million. It is attractive to the council because of its location, size and parking lot.

In addition, the council is hesitant to spend the estimated $300,000 to remodel city hall.

The council in a May 5 study session voted to ask the church to make a speedy decision because the property is the first "domino" that must fall before any firm commitment is made on the future location of city hall and library annex.

The questionnaire had not been tallied before that May 5 council session. The survey results were released in a church bulletin mailed in mid-May.

A majority of respondents indicated they would like to see the sanctuary remodeled rather than move the facilities to Carmel Hill.

Of the 250 respondents, 61 percent either "strongly approved" or "approved" of a proposal to remodel the existing church facilities.

Twenty-three percent responded that they either "strongly disapprove" or "disapprove" of the remodeling idea.

THIRTY-THREE percent of the respondents answered that they "strongly approve" or "approve" of a proposal to build a new sanctuary for the 1,100-member congregation on Carmel Hill near the intersection of Highway 68 and Highway 1.

The survey questions and results as printed in the church bulletin are:

• "I feel that the church's programs can be accomplished at its present Carmel location without any structural change. In their response, 11 percent strongly approved, 9 percent approved, 17 percent had no opinion, 24 percent disapproved, and 39 percent strongly disapproved.

• "I feel that we should remodel at our present location in order to accomplish our church programs. Of this position, 43 percent strongly approved, 18 percent approved, 16 percent had no opinion, 11 percent disapproved, and 12 percent strongly disapproved.

• "I feel that we need more space than can be produced at our present location and that we should consider moving. In response to this statement, 21 percent strongly approved, 12 percent approved, 18 percent had no opinion, 14 percent disapproved, and 35 percent strongly disapproved.

• "I would continue to attend Carmel Presbyterian Church if it changed its location. In responding to this, 50 percent strongly approved, 16 percent approved, 17 percent had no opinion, 4 percent disapproved, and 13 percent strongly disapproved.

• "I would be willing to contribute towards the building of a new church. In their response, 28 percent strongly approved, 17 percent approved, 21 percent had no opinion, 10 percent disapproved, and 24 percent strongly disapproved.

• "I would be willing to contribute towards the remodeling of our present church. To this, 42 percent strongly approved, 27 percent approved, 17 percent had no opinion, 5 percent disapproved and 9 percent strongly disapproved.

Protest hearing for Carmel River program

By JOE LIVERNOIS

LANDOWNERS ALONG the Boronda stretch of the Carmel River have a chance to end efforts by the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District to stabilize that area at a June 4 protest hearing at the Carmel Valley Trail and Saddle Club.

The hearing, scheduled for 7:30 p.m., is one last step the district needs to take before

'To think you'll be able to get out of this because you've escaped so far is only fooling yourself. If you live on the river, some day you'll be faced with it, take it from me.'

an election in which residents along the stretch have a chance to vote on a proposed assessment district that would finance the $350,000 bank stabilization project.

As the protest hearing approaches, a group of Garzas Road residents are about to make one last pitch to urge their neighbors to support the project.

The neighbors include Thai Conklin, Maynard Briggs and Lucy Morris, all Garzas Road residents who have suffered varying degrees of land erosion as a result of river bank instability in past years. The trio has vocally supported the water district effort since it was proposed more than a year ago.

"I know a lot of people will say, 'Well, it's just Conklin and Briggs and Morris talking again,'" Briggs said. "But we're talking because we've come to learn so much about the river."

What they have learned, Briggs said, is that no matter how secure a property owner might think his land is, the river is so out of control that the next big rainstorm may force the river into their back yard.

Briggs said he has lived in his Garzas Road property more than 20 years and, while his neighbors' property washed away, he had no problems with erosion until the heavy rains of early 1983.

The project proposed by the water district is a comprehensive revetment and willow planting system that would divert the flow of the river down the center of the river bed.

THE DISTRICT hopes it can complete similar projects down the entire area of the troubled river, but has started its activity along the Boronda stretch because that is the highest point of the river where serious erosion problems have taken place.

THE PALMER FAMILY of Carmel Valley has spent more than $250,000 for its riprap project along Carmel River to protect the family home from erosion damage to its home. The family lost a swimming pool last year days after they moved into the house. (Photo by Joe Livernois).

If the proposal survives the protest hearing next week and is approved by voters in the proposed assessment district in a mail ballot scheduled for September, the Boronda project could be completed by the first of December, according to Gary Page, the engineer hired by the district earlier this year to oversee the stabilization program.

If the assessment district is approved in Boronda, property owners would be assessed $4.67 per linear foot of riverfront property. The assessment would be made annually for the next five years.

The process could be halted if more than 50 percent of the 99 property owners along the river formally protest the formation of the district. It would also be halted if landowners who represent more than 50 percent of the assessed valuation of all property within the district object.

Protests can be made formally either verbally at the hearing next week or by a letter sent to the district.

Supporters of the project say they believe opponents who might object because their land has survived the erosion problems of years past may be a bit shortsighted.

"To think you'll be able to get out of this because you've escaped so far is only fooling yourself," said Mrs. Morris. "If you live on the river, some day you'll be faced with it, take it from me."

"I don't have the words to describe the emotion you feel when you watch your property drop foot by foot into the river."

THOSE EMOTIONS are aggravated further when property owners attempt to do something to stop the erosion, only to find themselves confronted with the bureaucratic chokehold of state and county ordinances, permits, reviews and conditions, she said.

Garden project takes root at Rippling River complex

SEVERAL DIFFERENT Carmel Valley organizations helped sprout a new program last week at Rippling River, the Monterey County Housing Authority complex for disabled persons.

The result is a gardening project undertaken by residents at Rippling River that could provide summer vegetables within weeks.

Armed with trowels, small rakes and green thumbs, about a dozen residents showed up for the first planting May 22.

The first to break ground on the gardening project was Steve Arena, who, proudly sporting his San Francisco Giants Croix de Candlestick macho shirt, planted his tomato plant squarely in the middle of his patch.

"This is the type of project the Community Services Commission should be interested in," said Don Maddox, president of the Rippling River Residents Association and a recently elected member of the Monterey County Community Services Commission.

Lily Kotler, a Rippling River employee, and Walter Toy, a member of the Carmel Valley Kiwanis Club, directed the planting project.

Serious fire hazard this summer

CARMEL VALLEY residents should be particularly careful with fires this summer, which promises to be one of the worst brush fire seasons in seven years, Mid-Carmel Valley Fire Protection District officials warned last week.

"The fire department has been informed that the 1984 fire season is considerably more hazardous and there is a much greater potential for wildfire than last year and previous years," said Sidney Reade, public education officer for the Mid-Valley fire district.

"The season has arrived four weeks earlier than normal due to the early summer weather and drying winds we have been experiencing," she said.

Much of Carmel Valley is prime for fires because of the abundance of native chaparral and wind patterns, she added.

"Once again the surrounding community has joined together for the benefit of the residents of Rippling River," said Hollee Farmer, the resident manager.

Members of the Carmel Valley Kiwanis Club showed up at Rippling River early May 20 to build a redwood garden box. The redwood planks were donated by the housing authority, but the Kiwanians built the box, which is about 20 feet long.

The bed is raised to a two-foot elevation "for ease of use by wheelchair-bound persons, those on crutches and the elderly who often have stiff and aching joints and backs," said Ms. Farmer.

The Garden Club of Carmel Valley donated tomato and cucumber plants. Max Hodges Landscaping of Carmel delivered garden soil he donated.

Besides the tomatoes and cucumbers, the residents planted beans and lettuce.

And, in a show of impatience that afflicts the most casual of gardeners, the residents, when told the tomatoes probably will not be ready for harvest for two months, asked Ms. Kotler to bring radish seeds, which mature in two to three weeks, in a hurry.

Ms. Reade said up to 80 tons of chaparral can grow on a single acre and that chaparral burns "with intense heat of up to 2,500 degrees" that is nearly impossible to stop.

Ms. Reade urged Carmel Valley residents to take a few precautions now that could prevent a tragedy later this summer.

She said "effective property management" can save homes in areas of high fire potential.

The so-called "green fireman" program covers factors such as the elimination of ignition sources from the property, topography, building design and density, fire resistant landscape, water sources and building material treatment.

Most important, the program tells homeowners what to do if there is a wildfire, she said.

First of all, homeowners should clear property surrounding their homes of all high weeds, excess vegetation and debris now.

CAROLYN METCALF has her own cheering section, in the person of her 23-month-old grandson, Gary Hunt, as she used a trowel to dig a hole for her tomato plant in the community garden at Rippling River last week.

Protest hearing June 4

further erosion are futile. And the manic course of the river can undermine even the best-laid stabilization projects.

"The money we have spent so far is money we know we were throwing down the river," Mrs. Morris said. "But at the time we had no other choice."

With the river management program proposed by the water district, the comprehensive design work could ensure that nothing upriver will threaten homeowners downriver.

And for erosion-prone individual property owners, some of whom have already spent more than $300,000, the price tag of the water district plan is a relative pittance, she said.

"With this plan, we know what it will cost us," Briggs said. "It's like a dream come true for us."

He added that when the river started eating away at his property, he was unable to get a cost estimate from contractors he asked to stabilize his bank because they told him that conditions required by the California Department of Fish and Game for such projects can change at a whim.

The Monterey County Flood Control and Water Conservation Department has agreed to give the water management district total permit authority once the engineering studies are completed.

If there is any uncertainty about the proposed project which the three understand, it is that government projects along the river have continued to fail.

The Strength of Real Experience

Committee to elect Howard Brunn 5th District Supervisor, Post Office Box 6267, Carmel, CA 93921; Ray Charlson and Maurie McGuire, Co-chairs, 624-1441; Merrill Headrick, Treasurer.

C V.P.O.A. NEWS

BY ROBERT GREENWOOD

I'M SURE that most Valleyites, including many of our own members, have only a vague idea of how CVPOA operates in the area of land use, and I believe an outline of what we do is especially appropriate this month, while the revised Carmel Valley Master Plan is before the board of supervisors in Salinas.

The Carmel Valley Property Owners' Association exists primarily "to preserve, protect and defend the natural beauty and the resources of Carmel Valley and Monterey County." We pursue this goal by working with the County of Monterey to revise and improve land use planning in the Valley, while at the same time we are helping residents to deal with existing situations.

Consider first our Land Use Committee, headed this year by Glenn Chang, assisted by Pam Austin and Todd Wahle. This committee regularly receives all agendas of the county supervisors, planning commission, and zoning administrator, culls the agendas for items of concern to Valley residents, calls county staff for more detailed information, and sends a representative to Salinas when advisable.

Simultaneously we are receiving enquiries, complaints, and requests for action from Valley residents, whether CVPOA members or not. All these opinions and data on a given issue are considered by the Land Use Committee; any action which they recommend must first be approved by the full board of directors.

Since the board meets once a month, rapid action may require that the board be polled by telephone, so that Valley residents may be assured of a voice at a hearing in Salinas. In many cases, naturally, we are simply reiterating a stand which CVPOA has previously endorsed, or we are calling for enforcement of a protective measure.

Our relation with county staff is cooperative, not adversary. The county simply does not have the staff to monitor all the issues which arise in Carmel Valley, and that is where we can help. Although we deal mostly with the county planning department, other public agencies such as the water management district and the air pollution control district become involved in land use questions. CVPOA has separate committees for liaison with them.

The directors of CVPOA endeavor to obtain an exchange of views and good working relations with supervisors, who are the final arbiters of land use decisions affecting the Valley. Especially, of course, our Fifth District supervisor, and the two planning commissioners who are appointed to serve the Fifth District — currently Gary Varga and David Hendrick.

IMPORTANT SPECIAL MEETING!

Supervisor candidates give views

QUESTIONS:

- 1) Do you favor provisions in the Carmel Valley Master Plan that allow only a limited number of new building sites in Carmel Valley each year? Do you feel the plan provides adequate environmental and growth control mechanisms?
- 2) Do you support and would you, as supervisor, encourage the use of the transfer of density credit program incorporated in the Big Sur Local Coastal Program to help implement policies to protect the "critical viewshed"?
- 3) Should the Odellos be allowed to proceed with the intensity of development proposed on their property on the east side of Highway 1?
- 4) Should the masses have access to Stillwater Cove?
- 5) The county still has the power to stop construction of Hatton Canyon Freeway/Highway/Roadway or whatever it will be called. Would you want to stop the Hatton Canyon project in favor of, perhaps, the widening of existing Highway 1?
- 6) Morale among county employees is near rock bottom as, in most departments, one can hear grousing about recent reduction in benefits and percentage increases in salaries below the average cost of living increases. How can the board be more responsive to county employees in the face of the county's tight budget?
- 7) Do you favor increased/decreased salaries for supervisors? Is a supervisorial position a full-time job?
- 8) If you are elected to the Monterey County Board of Supervisors, chances are you will fill the county position on the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District Board of Directors. As a water district director, would you wholeheartedly endorse and promote a larger dam on the San Clemente site of the Carmel River or would you also want the district to consider alternative sources?
- 9) What about the city of Carmel? It seems that every time the county board makes a land use decision on an issue near and dear to the city, Carmel officials rush to the Monterey County Courthouse to file a lawsuit. And the city has had uncanny success against the county in court. What can a county supervisor do to stop this adversary relationship?
- 10) Does Carmel Valley Ranch have a vested right to everything the board of supervisors has given it over the past five or six years or should ranch developers be subject to the same competitive system the rest of the developers in Carmel Valley will have to face under the provisions of the Carmel Valley Master Plan?
- 11) Aside from a simple endorsement of the Monterey County Housing Authority plans to build a housing complex for moderate income seniors in Carmel Valley, what can the county do to encourage more low and moderate income housing in Monterey County?

Dortha Roesler

- 1) It depends on so many factors, the needs of the community being the most important. This is like trying to give a book report on the Bible.
- 2) As a supervisor, I would never support a half-baked plan like that.
- 3) The Odellos property is private land. As citizens of the U.S.A., they should have the right to develop their property if they wish. If their neighbors want to control their property, they should buy the land first.

- 4) No, this small private fragile beach has been well preserved by the owners. It is too small an area to be open to the public. There are many other beaches along 17 Mile Drive that are open to the public.
- 5) No, I am in favor of the Hatton Canyon freeway. After talking with hundreds of citizens in the Carmel area I am convinced that this is their main priority.
- 6) I would have to know more about their problems before I could comment.
- 7) Some of the supervisors claim it is a full-time job. Others say it is not. The Grand Jury says it isn't. I would have to be a supervisor to tell you the answer.
- 8) As a supervisor on the water board, I would have to study the proposed locations and make a decision when I have more of the facts.
- 9) I would have to have a lot of facts from the legal department before I could make any decision on this.
- 10) I would simply have to have more facts to answer this.
- 11) Simplify the permit process and cut down on some of the red tape that is required to do any building.

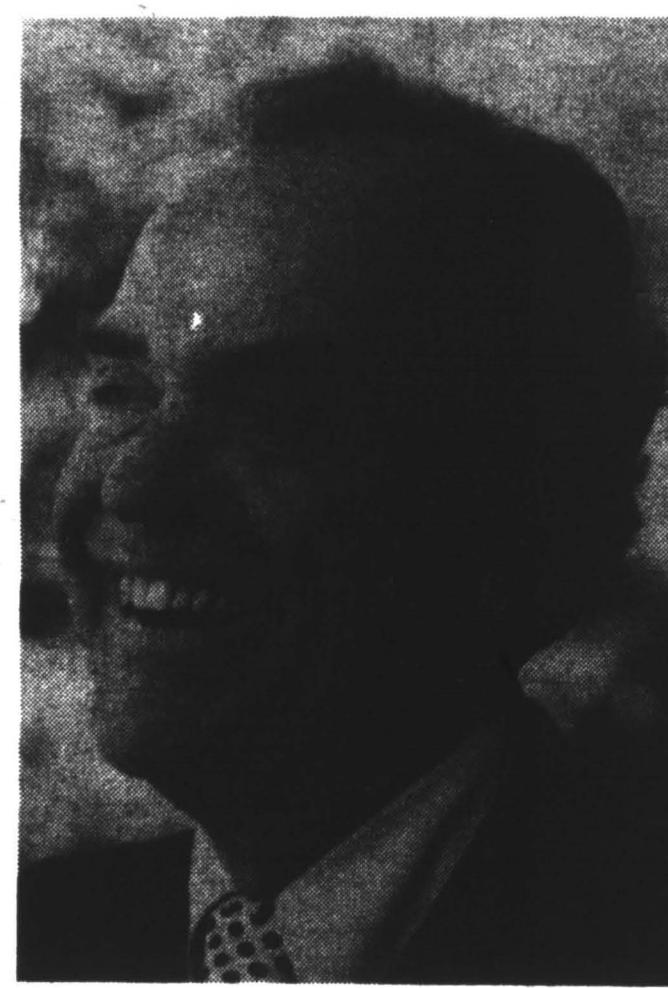

They can choose an individual who does not want to impose his political philosophies on others. The "rush to the courthouse" to which you refer has been generated by failure to cooperate, communicate and compromise.

- 10) Carmel Valley Ranch should be subject to the same rules as those governing other developers. I don't play tennis. I have a driveway. I've been to the desert.
- 11) It is less than realistic to expect the Housing Authority of the county of Monterey to provide moderate cost housing for everyone. The only solution will be for the government to get out of the way and let the marketplace perform. We need county officials who will expedite construction, rather than hamstring homebuilding. We must find ways to simplify the permit process. We must curb attempts to charge exorbitant hookup fees in an effort to discourage growth.

be a team player. As supervisor, I will restore confidence to the government process in Salinas.

- 7) I'm secure enough financially that I can serve this county and not need a higher salary. I'm used to working 60 to 70 hours a week; I'll be available at specific times in all areas of the district. There will be supervisorial meetings here on the peninsula when the issues are neighborhood-related. I plan to stop a lot of the meddling into various pet programs that has characterized the present board. For me, it will be a full-time job. I enjoy long hours; I enjoy working with my neighbors to achieve long-lasting results that will make it possible for our children to enjoy much of what this area has given to me and my family.
- 8) Alternatives will always be an option. I support the direction the water board is taking. I support a dam. The dam, as to size and who will pay for it, will be voted on by the people of the district. The people will always make the right decision when fully and carefully advised of the options. I trust the people.
- 9) The lawsuits should not have been necessary. Three members of the present board of supervisors have not been responsive to the needs of the people who elected them. In some instances, outside developers called the shots. My record is long and clear on my priorities for our area. I'll be able to work with Marc Del Piero, Dusan Petrovich, and the newly elected member from the Fourth District. As I've said in my literature... "not just a new supervisor — but a whole new direction." I will work with the cities. Adversary relationships are counterproductive.
- 10) No, but it's there, and that's history. But never again! Mr. Peters made an ill-advised and arrogant statement in March of 1983, that the Carmel Valley Ranch had a "vested right" to the water allocations. I would fight to have the developers prove the mythical Tularcitos aquifer.

- 11) We have approximately 1,900 units of low income housing in the county at this time with the Section 8 assisted housing program. Without federal or state help, low income housing at the county level is difficult because of the negative cash flow problems. Moderate income housing is being addressed through the inclusionary housing ordinance and the resultant "in lieu" funds generated. Also, under the ordinance, 15 percent of new development is required to be moderate income housing. Another approach that should be pursued is public tax-exempt revenue bonds. I will work towards having the county provide more land for housing as cost of land is the key element in housing. As a member, and longtime supporter, of the Carmel Foundation, I'm pleased to have helped Carmel with its housing concerns. While on the city council, I spearheaded the purchase of land in Carmel earmarked for the elderly.

Howard Brunn

- 1) Yes, I do favor the Carmel Valley Master Plan. In 1980, I played the leadership role in "City of Carmel vs. Monterey County," wherein the county was forced to do the EIR that resulted in the present Master Plan. I am not convinced the plan provides adequate controls. As supervisor, I plan to be very involved in seeing triggering mechanisms are in place that will prevent development from occurring until water, sewage, air and road standards have been met.
- 2) I support and have worked for six years to see a Big Sur Local Coastal Plan in place. Keeping mining from sacred Pico Blanco has always been one of my prime concerns. The density credit program is innovative but untried. More study is necessary. A quote from the Coastal Act, passed Jan. 1, 1977, is appropriate here: "(development) consistent with sound resource conservation principles and constitutionally protected rights of private property owners." I couldn't say it better.
- 3) The Odellos' 163 units granted for the eastern section is not excessive, particularly in light of their willingness to cooperate with flood control concerns.
- 4) Stillwater Cove and Otter Cove areas are too small and fragile to support unlimited public access.
- 5) Twenty years ago, it was demonstrated that public input can help design a pleasing freeway. Local folks helped then, and we can all help now to see that the Hatton Canyon project goes through with taste and care, using a parkway approach, with moderate speed limits, and following the natural contours of the land. Forested and landscaped, it can be an example of a practical and esthetically appealing solution. I support the new road.
- 6) The board can be more responsive by taking some of the politics out of the job. My approach would be the same as when I served on the Carmel City Council. Being supervisor is a policy-making position. I'm experienced and have professional management skills (I've created and managed several successful businesses) that will allow the county administrative officer the personnel authority to do his job. I'm a people and residentially oriented person, but when it comes to management, I understand the needs of the county's budget and will

Karin Strasser Kauffman

- 1) Yes, I favor the annual allocation system of the proposed new Carmel Valley Master Plan. The new plan is of necessity

a compromise, but since I was instrumental in helping to appoint the Citizens Advisory Committee which reconciled the EIR with the old Carmel Valley Master Plan, I know that the intent of the plan is to provide us with detailed guidelines, zoning, and a numerical rating system for competitive development applications. Those intentions can indeed be met, but only if we elect a supervisor who will hold firm to the plan's provisions. Past supervisors' decisions and amendments of land use have been sufficiently disappointing to warrant our extraordinary vigilance in the future. I basically support the trigger mechanisms in the plan, as originally developed by our CVPOA board, but am concerned that the now proposed "front-loading" in new allocations, as well as the planning commission's recommendation to count the first year of allocation as year number five will burden the first Citizens Allocation Committee to the point of endangering the workability of the plan. Also the language of the plan needs to be standardized. I am concerned that the use of the word "lot" in place of "unit" will permit a higher level of density. Already the 50 percent population increase permitted, if total build-out is allowed, appears too high to me. None of this is to detract from my wholehearted support for the plan. My commitment is to provide the Valley, the Fifth District, and the county of Monterey with land use policies which are clearly understood, fair and sound.

2) I support the Coastal Plan policies protecting the critical viewshed. However, I do not like the Transfer of Development Credit Program, as I do not believe it to be a workable concept. Despite this, since the adopted Big Sur Local Coastal Plan mandates the program, I will do my best to attain it. We need to acquire receiver sites, to encourage realtors in establishing clear market values, and to work closely with land owners. We also need to be prepared for alternative solutions, should the Transfer of Development Credit Programs prove to be unobtainable.

3) If we are to have additional development in Carmel Valley, the Odello East property is an appropriate location for part of it. The currently approved 162 units is too high, however. The board of supervisors originally proposed 52 to 90 units on Odello East. A citizens advisory committee then recommended that the Odellos be asked to lower their levee, allowing occasional flooding of their artichoke fields on the south bank of the river. Such action by the Odellos would greatly reduce the risk of serious flooding in The Crossroads and Mission Fields areas on the north bank. The citizens advisory committee further proposed that the Odellos be compensated for this action by allowing increased density on the developable portions of their property. The supervisors and the Coastal Commission then approved 162 units. The flood protection gained by lowering the Odello levee is badly needed, especially for Mission Fields. I agree with the citizens advisory committee that trading the levee and flood easement for additional density is almost certainly the only way Mission Fields will ever get this protection. I therefore support some development on the Odello property. As an elected director of CVPOA, I have studied the various Odello proposals. We have determined and testified to the appropriate density of 64 units on that property in the past. Given some reimbursement trade-off for flood protection, I believe we are now close to agreeing on an exact number of units between that figure of 64 and the 162-unit allowance by the current board of supervisors. However, I would like to see the Odello lands remain within the allocation system of the Carmel Valley Master Plan — a provision which is

- 1) Yes, I favor provisions in the Carmel Valley Master Plan that allow only a limited number of new building sites each year. This will permit planning for services, such as road improvements, to keep pace with the need. The plan does provide adequate environmental and growth control mechanisms.
- 2) I am committed to the ethical and equitable administration of the adopted coastal plans. If the transfer of density credit is adopted in the final plan, and it is shown to be equitable, I would encourage its use. However, I have some apprehension that the process might involve a forced sale below true market value or utility value on the part of the seller which would result in a "windfall" profit to the owner of the receiver sites. In the course of the campaign I have pointed out that, both in this country and abroad, properly sited and designed isolated residential structures do not necessarily "destroy" but sometimes enhance a "viewshed." A little common sense combined with a sense of equity will preserve that lovely Big Sur coastal drive.
- 3) The Board of Directors of the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association, when I was a member, contributed to the Odello Land Acquisition fund to help purchase the western Odello fields. It was our understanding at the time that, in consideration of the Odellos' willingness to sell that property at substantially less money than would accrue if the property were developed, a "reasonable" amount of development would be allowed on the eastern portion. The community should honor that commitment. Further, it has been recommended that the Odellos be persuaded to lower the dikes on the south side of the Carmel River to protect the Mission Fields and condominium residential areas and the Carmel center commercial areas from flooding in storm flows only slightly greater than occurred a year ago. If the eastern Odello fields are not to be purchased outright to accomplish that objective, an equitable amount of development may be the only method of compensation. I am committed to "the ethical and equitable administration of the adopted coastal plans." The adopted plan does include development on the eastern portion of the Odello property. I do not know what is "reasonable" or equitable, but I will honor the community's commitment, the commitment of the coastal plan, and my own commitment as a citizen of an honorable community.
- 4) The bureaucratic bullheadedness of the Coastal Commission with respect to the Stillwater Cove beach led me to say in the course of this campaign: "Lord Acton stated that, 'Power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely.' The Coastal Commission is approaching absolute corruption." The commission is wrong on four counts. First, their position is an unjustifiable intrusion into private property rights. Second, this remote and insensitive bureaucracy is attempting to act in direct opposition to the will of the local majority. Third, unrestricted access of the public to fragile and unpolluted beaches is destructive and not consistent with the objective of preserving the coast. And lastly the proposed plan for issuing permits, policing access and building fences to keep the public on the state-owned portion of the beach would actually reduce access of residents of Del Monte Forest who, on an informal basis, occasionally find their way to the beach.

- 5) The citizens of Carmel, as verified by a recent poll, and the citizens of Carmel Valley and areas around Carmel are in favor of the highway through Hatton Canyon. I am committed to assuring that that road is completed as soon as possible. Local citizens should be concerned and interact with CalTrans to assure that the interchanges are esthetically designed and landscaped and that any cuts necessary are sensitively planted as was Carmel Hill. Beyond that, let's move forward.
- 6) I stated in a letter to the Monterey County Employees Association that, from my background as a manager employed by major, efficiently operated corporations, "I recognize the importance of compensation and employee relations, not only to attract and retain competent employees, but through morale factors, to maintain the highest level of productivity from the employee staff." The board of supervisors should adopt that concept as policy and direct the line management, through the county administrator, to develop practices consistent with that policy.

- 7) Any supervisor who is elected should accept the fact that the salary was accepted by him/her as a condition of accepting the position. Except for cost of living adjustments consistent with those of the rest of the county staff, no supervisor should be allowed a salary increase which he/she has voted upon until he/she has again stood for election. A select committee of former Grand Jurors has found that the position is not full time. I will be available for as many of the 24 hours in each day that are required to do what needs to be done. My early retirement from the corporate world will permit me to do that. For supervisors who are not using their time as a supervisor to develop a political image to run for higher office the job may not be full time. Experience alone will permit me to give a definitive answer to your question.
- 8) Yes, I would wholeheartedly endorse and promote a small new dam at the San Clemente site on the Carmel River. I have, for 11 years, considered alternatives to a dam as a solution to the water management problems of the community which include the restoration and preservation of the Carmel River. One of those alternatives is present consideration of converting sewage to drinking water using water hyacinths not upheld in the plan now before the supervisors. If the Odello land is to be excluded, as anticipated, we should at least count the units granted and subtract them from the total Valley build-out at the rate of one and one-half to one over the next 20 years. Thus the impact of the project on surrounding territories, in terms of traffic, water usage and air quality, would at least be recognized and mitigated.

4) While I support the general provision of public access in the California Coastal Act, I do not support public access in the specific instance of Stillwater Cove for two reasons. One, this is a particularly fragile marine area and must be afforded some protection. Secondly, there is sufficient access to similar vistas and beaches in either direction to allow the public the full enjoyment it should have of our spectacular coastal stretches. Moreover, public access at that particular spot would create a monitoring nightmare for the county. I do not favor a law which in effect encourages disregard and is impossible to enforce.

5) I support the construction of a Hatton Canyon Freeway for safety reasons. The project is needed to accommodate past growth, not future growth. The present roadway and intersections are unsafe and delays intolerable, especially for emergency vehicles. Financing has been secured as of this year. The task before us now is to decide upon design and landscaping plans which will have minimum visual impact and provide the greatest safety measures. This determination should be made with extensive citizen participation.

6) Yes, county employee morale has been low and not only for the reasons cited. There is a need for better utilization of staff. Also more positive management and clear policy direction on the part of the supervisors is required. In the last several years we have been faced with a rash of resignations from many of our key and most respected county officials. There is no question but that the county staff is tired of being overruled and undermined by supervisors. County employees have a right to expect a direct and sympathetic management posture in the employee negotiation process, a fair personnel policy, and general support for recommendations by staff. I am proud to have the endorsement of the Monterey County Employees Association, which represents more than 1,750 county workers, as well as the endorsement of the Monterey County Deputy Sheriff's Association. I look forward to beginning my tenure as Fifth District supervisor on a positive footing with our employees and anticipate a good working relationship in Salinas.

7) I do not support a salary increase for supervisor, regardless of work load. I believe that the current salary range is adequate, in that public service — in contrast to private business — requires an element of sacrifice. I shudder to think of the kind of person we would have running for office, were the salary to be an inducement. And since we expect outstanding unpaid service from many other local officials, notably mayors and city councilors, it is only fair to compensate the supervisor within limitations. I certainly intend to work hard and full-time as supervisor. Any Fifth District supervisor who cannot devote his full time and energies to the job, will not be able to deliver to the people the level of service they demand and deserve. Our region encompasses the most expensive, open space in the county — it will be the site of major land use controversies unless very carefully tended. Moreover, two-thirds of Fifth District residents living in "unincorporated territory" have no one but their supervisor to represent them locally. They require constant ombudsman. I will make myself readily accessible. I will be out and about in our communities on a weekly basis, putting in the time required. Last fall I consulted with both our president and our dean of instruction at Monterey Peninsula College in order to arrange for a voluntary absence from my teaching duties. I am willing to interrupt my teaching career of 15 years at this point in order to work full-time as supervisor. What I hope to earn in that capacity above all is the respect of our people.

8) Even with limited growth, we need to improve our water supply. We also have a legal and moral obligation to remedy erosion problems and damage to the steelhead fishery caused by heavy pumping of water from Carmel Valley to supply the entire peninsula. I have worked for many years to restore the health of the Carmel River and protect our water source. A new dam is not the only way to solve our water supply, but probably is the only way we can solve both the water supply problem and also repair the river environment. A dam would give us back our river, with regular release of water during dry months to replenish the annual year-around flow. The water problem solution is, however, much more complicated than just a dam. A number of endeavors need to be explored simultaneously to really address the issue. There is simply no quick fix. To assure a sufficient supply of water, to protect water quality, and to provide for fair allocations to all of our jurisdictions, long-term planning for conservation and reclamation are absolutely imperative. We may also have to add wells in Seaside and examine the dredging of present dams. I am pleased with the current direction of the water board and in particular with the progress made over the last two years. We now have a flood-alert system, as well as a Carmel River Management Program for which I lobbied intensively. The water board is now preparing for an Environmental Impact Report, which should lead to a public vote on the dam in the near future. I expect to endorse and promote that dam proposal, once all safeguards have been met. It is the wording of the ballot proposition, and in particular the cost formula for the dam, which provides the challenge. Who will pay for the dam? I feel the larger share of the costs should be borne by new water users, paid through water hook-up charges, rather than by current residents' user fees. I am gratified to have the endorsement of all current directors of the water board, with exception of Ed Lee and Bill Peters. They support my candidacy because they anticipate, as do I, a good working relationship in reaching solutions to our water problems.

9) Yes, the city of Carmel-by-the-Sea has been hard pressed to prevent being undermined by the county. And Carmel is not alone in this. The city of Monterey also is threatened by county competition in land use planning along the Highway 1 corridor. I am determined to establish, in contrast to the past, good lines of communication between the county and our cities in the Fifth District. Respect and mutual regard can replace mistrust, and lawsuits can be avoided through dialogue. Good management skills, open discussion, and regular contact will go a long way toward meeting those goals. I will energetically work to establish clear lines of communication. I am pleased to have the public endorsement of the elected mayors of our cities, as well as the majority of both city councils. These individuals have worked with me in the community over many years, they know my leadership skills, and they trust me to provide improved city-county relations.

10) I have never supported the "vested right" interpretation of decisions on Carmel Valley Ranch, as rationalized by Bill Peters. Indeed, Carmel Valley Ranch — if only to be fair to other property owners who have patiently waited out moratoria and stood in line to compete for development rights — should be subject to the same allocation process in the future allocation system of the Carmel Valley Master Plan. Beyond that, it is imperative to point out that any project of the scope and size of Carmel Valley Ranch is inappropriate to our area and the planning goal of maintaining "the rural quality" of our valley. In permitting future growth, I favor a number of smaller projects rather than a large development which dominates the area and furthers the trend toward an artificial community. Rather, we need to assure a diverse, family community.

11) Given current land values, and the high costs of construction, the market place on its own will never bring about low and moderate income housing. Therefore, the maintenance of a natural, diverse community and housing opportunities for all of our people must be a planning priority of local government. We can do this in several ways through what I call a "patchwork approach." While no one effort will meet the total need for affordable housing, a variety of endeavors in combination can move us toward that goal. Foremost, the Inclusionary Housing Ordinance already on the books in Monterey County should be upheld and enforced. Instead of paying in lieu fees, developers should construct 15 percent of their units for moderate income occupancy. Furthermore, such housing should be on site or at least within the same community, instead of being located in the past in Salinas.

as absorbing materials. From that background of experience I can state, with a 99 percent probability of being correct, that there is no other alternative which will restore the river, enhance the steelhead fishery, protect the willows, reduce erosion, and promote the other beneficial uses of Carmel River water at less cost than will the new small dam which we should construct as quickly as possible.

9) With the completion of the EIR and the adoption of the Carmel Valley Master Plan, to which the citizens and city government of Carmel had ample opportunity to contribute and evaluate, there should be no need and no justification for further lawsuits. As a resident of Carmel as well as a contributor to the principles of the new plan, I understand both points of view. It is my fond hope that the adoption of the plan will cause further development to proceed under the rule of law rather than to be so subject to human passions and motivations.

10) "Vested right" is a legal concept which should be addressed by the legal profession, not by laymen. I would have preferred that the last portions of the Carmel Valley Ranch be subject to the competitive system proposed in the new Carmel Valley Master Plan. Had adoption of the plan not been blocked four years ago that might have been possible. By the time the new board is seated the matter will be a "fait accompli." The new board should direct its wit and energy toward not making mistakes in the future. It should avoid the herculean task of attempting to remedy any errors of the past.

11) With respect to encouragement of "low" and "moderate" income housing, the county government should first attempt to determine whether there is a real desire on the part of the public as a whole to accomplish that needed goal or whether the necessary action will not be opposed and blocked by the established narrow interest lobbying groups. Efforts to block further growth also tend to block housing for lower income citizens. Assuming that this goal is truly accepted and not just being given lip service by the politicians, the following constructive efforts might move forward.

- Find available land near the employment centers and remote enough from existing residential areas so the familiar cry, "Yes, do it but not near me," will not cause local opposition.
- Approve high density development for those areas so that it will become feasible for the private sector to plan financially sound development. This probably will require small unit apartments with innovative modern construction techniques.

- Reduce the delays in granting permits for all development allowed under approved master plans so that the substantial current cost of such delays will not need to be passed on to the buyers or renters. This would include avoiding time-consuming and expensive EIRs in areas where common sense indicates few or no additional impacts will be found by the process. The cooperation of lawsuit minded environmental lawyers obviously will be required.
- Explore whether the mass of building code regulations developed in recent years, which add substantially to the cost of construction, might not be safely reduced. When I grew up in Montana, many homes were built by the persons who lived in them with no permits or inspections required. Those homes were warm in winter, dry in the rain, and are still standing today. The cost of consumer protection imposed by our protective bureaucracies is borne by all — low income and moderate income alike. This problem, as well as the other problems which face us, could best be addressed through a little common sense and a little sense of give and take. What can actually be accomplished in this adversary society will be dependent not only upon the motivation and will of the supervisors but upon the cooperation of the many factions within the community.

King City or Prunedale. For while these latter areas need affordable housing, our own need is great. Additional options, such as land donations, private tax incentives, and applications for federal subsidies, must be explored and encouraged. Such efforts can succeed in providing quality, attractive housing at low rates, as is evident in the Portola Vista Project completed by the City of Monterey and the Monterey County Housing Authority. The county can become more involved. I have met with local investment counselors and the Monterey County Housing Authority — both are willing to explore applications in communities in the Fifth District. The Eastwood/Garner project is only one possibility. While senior housing is indeed a priority for moderate-income ranges, so is affordable housing for young families — even our "glamorous" Fifth District has some very unglamorous problems.

Expand the Airport?

NO!

Incumbent airport directors are now pushing through a major expansion at the Monterey Peninsula Airport. They would build a 150-acre commercial and aviation development on airport property, extend the main runway 1,000 feet, and construct a new parallel runway.

Three important candidates...Businessman Bill Foster of Carmel, Planning Commissioner Dan Villa and retired businessman, commercial pilot and electronics engineer Robert Herman oppose the airport expansion. They want a common sense airport with quality air service and an efficient budget. They're solidly opposed to expansion of the airport simply to support the growth plans of hotel developers.

Unseat the incumbents
Vote for...

Foster

"I want a functional feeder airport which will not oppress its citizens. I want more convenient air service and an airport where there's less noise, not more."

Villa

"Citizen groups and city governments oppose the airport expansion. Aviation groups and developers support it. I want an airport that reflects what the community wants...not what the developers want."

Herman

"At a time when all levels of government are short of funding, it seems inconceivable that Airport Directors are planning to spend millions of tax dollars for unnecessary expansion. I'm opposed to it."

- Convenient air service
- Keep airport off tax rolls
- Minimum noise, maximum safety
- No major unnecessary expansion

Surprise party for Neswitz

Philip Neswitz of Pebble Beach was taken by surprise when he boarded The Princess Monterey boat last Saturday. He had thought he was attending a party given by Lee and Artie Early. Instead, his wife Margye had planned the surprise party to celebrate her husband's seven decades.

The "Balloon Lady" from The Balloon Hut was on board to greet the guest of honor with a bevy of bright balloons sent by Ted and Velma Balestreri. Everyone sang "Happy Birthday" to balloon-playing accompaniment.

The invitations read "C'est Une Fete Francaise Style Rive Gauche. Aboard The Princess Monterey Bateau. S'il vous plait, come as your favorite French artist, character, painting, or in a 'Left Bank' costume." And a variety of attractive costumes was worn by the 45 guests.

French banners, a replica of the Statue of Liberty and a French menu followed the party theme. French music was furnished by Richard LaSalle. After a cruise to view Pacific Grove and Cannery Row from another perspective, the ship returned to anchor near Wharf No. 1. The red, white and blue cake, arranged in three tiers, was topped with a gold Eiffel Tower, decorated with French flags, and the greeting, "Bon Anniversaire Philippe."

Guests included Larry and Genevieve Brodersen, from Palo Alto; Trini Lye, from San Francisco; John and Rhonda Luongo, from Newark; and, of course, Lee and Artie Early, from Monterey. From Carmel Valley were Fred and Marielle Faieta and John and Patricia Bernardi; and from Sacramento, Dr. George Becker.

From Pacific Grove: Gael Gallant and Victor and Joyce Thompson. From Carmel: Peggy Compton, Patricia Cullen, Richard and Patti LaSalle, Susan Negri, Shannon Esther, Dick and Marnie Shooter, Judge Donald and Shirley Thomas and Andrew Spranza.

From Pebble Beach were Pierre and Gemma Ajoux, John and Gene Andrews, Barbara Burdick, Jeanne Cremer, Jack and Mirka Kakis, George and Ursula Meidenbauer, Orville and Evelyn Rodgers, and Saul and Mimi Weingarten. Phil's son, Irwin, came from San Jose.

SPIRULINA: THE FOOD OF THE FUTURE IS HERE NOW.
Spirulina Plankton is the most basic substance in the whole food chain... Spirulina's high-quality protein contains 18 of 22 amino acids required for health — and all eight essential amino acids in the correct proportion. Protein such as this is rarely found in non-animal sources, so Spirulina is popular with vegetarians. And Spirulina's protein, which provides sustaining energy to the human body, is up to 95 percent, digestible as compared with beef's 20 percent. Several kinds of unusual proteins called biliproteins which occur naturally in our own bodies are found in Spirulina. Spirulina is low in calories, fats and sodium and amazingly high in efficient proteins (containing 60 to 71 percent) and all the cell salts and enzymes for body metabolism.

BUSINESS BEAT BY FLORENCE MASON

Winds of change still blowing

THE WINDS of change continue to blow in the Carmel business district; new shops and new owners abound.

AND A NAME CHANGE TOO

It started as On Consignment and ended as Phillips Antiques and Collectibles. That was one of several details worked out between the business license board and Tina and William Phillips.

The Phillips applied for a license to operate a shop to sell antique furniture and collectibles on a consignment basis in Bonnymead Court (Lincoln Street between Ocean and Seventh avenues). Tina Phillips told the board that she and her husband now rent space in the Salinas Antique Guild under the name On Consignment and believe there is a market in Carmel for a shop emphasizing American antiques and collectibles.

She described "bona fide antiques" as anything older than 100 years and "collectibles" as things from the '20s, '30s and even '40s. "People will have an opportunity to bring in great pieces they have not been using," she said.

The Carmel Business License and Code Review Board had a number of questions. Tina Phillips' answers apparently satisfied them and she did gain a license for the new business. One question concerned traffic, since operating on a consignment basis could mean many individual deliveries. Mrs. Phillips pointed out that she and her husband would pick up some themselves and she assured the board that most, if not all, of the deliveries would be made after hours.

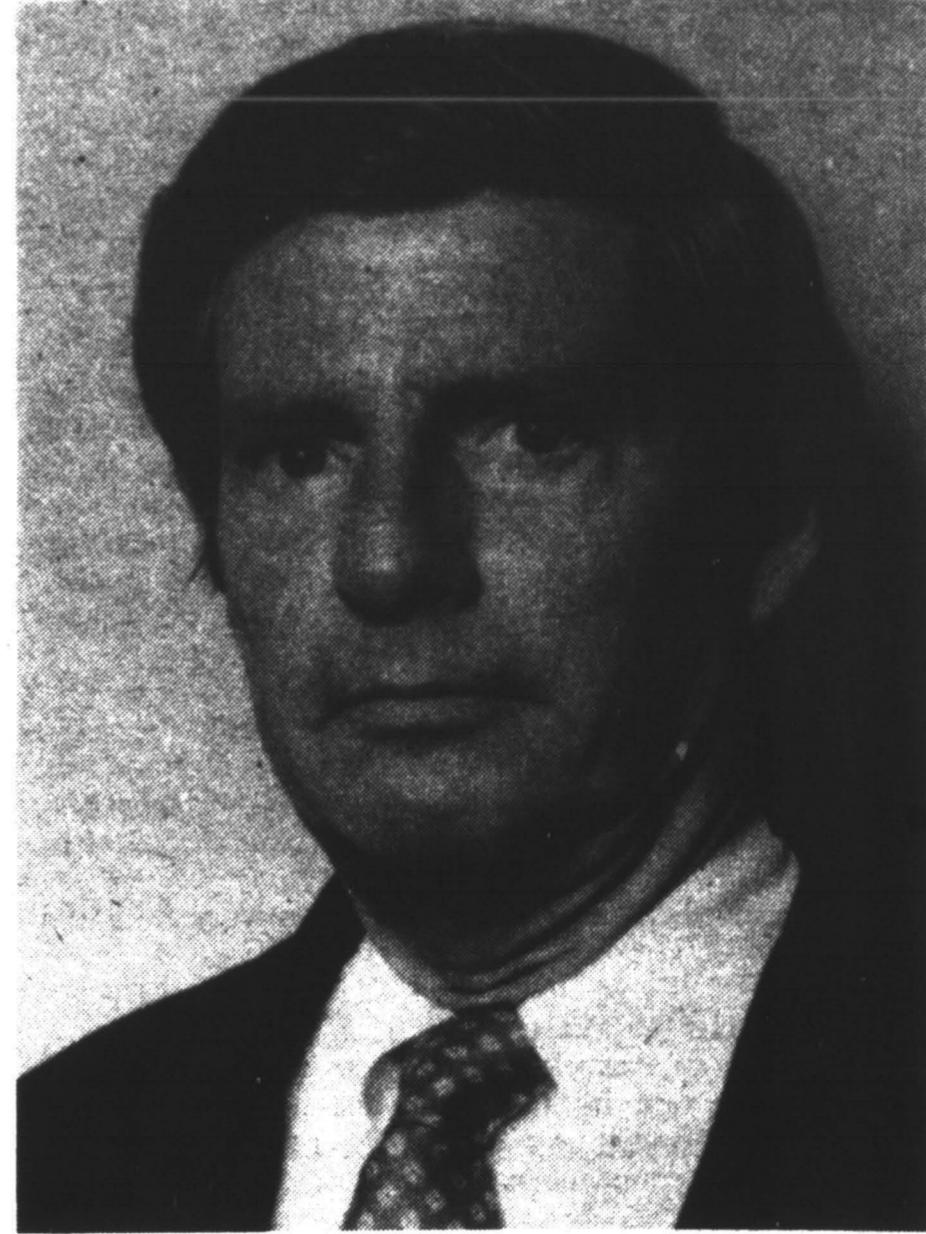

In an attempt to make a distinction between antiques and collectibles on the one hand and "second-hand merchandise" on the other, assistant planning director Diane White said the latter is "generally prohibited" in Carmel. Mrs. Phillips said bona fide antiques would account for at least 75 percent of the business, with collectibles about 25 percent. She gave some examples of the latter: "Crocks, churns, old tin boxes, cooking utensils — things people are using now for the country look."

Diane White made a motion to approve the application, providing that the word "antiques" is in the name and that collectibles are limited to 20 percent of the volume of sales. That was acceptable to the owners as well, and Phillips Antiques and Collectibles was on its way to Bonnymead Court.

Mrs. Phillips said the shop will offer a contract for 60 to 90 days for each item brought to them. She showed members of the board some pictures of typical merchandise, including an early American cedar chest, lamps and other pieces their limited space in Salinas would not accommodate.

THE FRENCH (PASTRIES) ARE COMING!

Scheduled to open next month in Carmel Square (San Carlos Street between Ocean and Seventh avenues) is Fifi's

WILLIAM GARGIULO JR. has been appointed to a new position with G.D. Searle.

Bakery. It's a new outlet for a Pacific Grove bakery that is apparently well known on the local scene, as one board member was heard to say: "It's super! Welcome!"

Owners Philippe and Michelle Tardivel said they have many customers who come to their Pacific Grove shop from Carmel, so the addition of a Carmel outlet seemed logical. All of the baking for both shops will continue to be done in Pacific Grove. Because it is a "full-range, non-specialty bakery," a use permit is not required.

In fact, the license board's only concern was that ever-present one of traffic, and deliveries. With the Tardivels' complete agreement, the approval of their application included a condition that deliveries to the new bakery will be made before 9 a.m.

MEANWHILE, AT THE PLAZA...

Steve Chao set some sort of record when he appeared before the Business License and Code Review Board earlier this month. In one of the shortest hearings on record, he gained approval for his application as the new owner of a business in Carmel Plaza. He also won a "good luck!" sendoff from the members of the board.

Chao is the new owner of Somsong's Thai Silk Shop on the upper level of the plaza. One reason he glided through the licensing process so quickly is that he told the board "everything will stay the same" in that attractive shop.

The newest shop owner in Carmel Plaza was here originally as a student of business and law at Monterey Peninsula College. Then he went to West Virginia and gained good experience for his present activity in wholesale business — arts, furniture and silk clothes. He returned to the peninsula because his family is here and he lives in Marina with his sister for the present. All that will change when his fiancee joins him and they move to a home of their own.

The original Somsong, who was married about a year ago and moved to a new home in Pacifica, sold Oriental gifts, jewelry, silk flowers, temple jars, Imari plates, silk blouses and caftans. Chao said he will bring in some new imports to supplement the lines already there.

IT WILL BE DIFFERENT!

That's the promise of John Fields about the Stock Exchange restaurant. Last week, I promised to tell you more about his plans and here it is.

Basically, the restaurant in Su Vecino Court (Dolores Street between Fifth and Sixth avenues) will be similar to pubs such as the Bully III, Fields confirmed. "But it will be different!" he said. One difference: "more exotic dishes." Another: "We'll be open at 7 a.m. for breakfast, and after dinner, the dinner area will be opened for the pub menu also. That goes on until 2 a.m. "And cocktails — 365 days a year," enthusiastic John Fields added.

The news about his ownership of the long-empty restaurant was hardly out before Fields knew he was in business: "I have just had a call from a group of doctors who want to have a banquet here. That's on our books for Nov. 9!"

"SOMETIMES I FEEL LIKE A DOCTOR"

Errol Chambliss has opened a Custom Golf Club and Repair Center in the Mid-Valley Shopping Center to provide clubmaking services to golfers of all abilities.

person attention from the expert who is going to do the operation."

Chamblee knows golfers well, for he has practiced his clubmaking art for the past four years in Palm Springs. Now a student at Monterey Peninsula College, he has been involved in the world of golf since he was 10, when he first teed off with the juniors. That was in Connecticut and he continued his education — and his golf — in Palm Springs, where he played on the high school team.

He likes the "people part" of clubmaking, too. "I really enjoy fitting clubs to each golfer's particular swing, then building golf clubs that help him or her to play better." His work includes everything from regripping to restoring the finish on the new metal woods.

LOOKING FOR "GOOD" BUSINESS

Fred Noseworthy began his talk for the Carmel Business Association May meeting with this bon mot: "There is one organization you have not approached that can solve all your problems with the city. The SPCA! The SPCA could arrest the city of Carmel for attempted murder of the goose that laid the golden egg."

Having caught the group's attention, Noseworthy said the committee of which he is chairman — the Economic Development Committee of the Monterey Peninsula Chamber of Commerce — didn't exist a year ago. Its purpose, he said, is to induce "good" business, other than tourist-related, to this area. As examples, he suggested light manufacturing companies and offices.

"If tourism falls off, it creates problems for everyone," Noseworthy said. "The answer is to strengthen another area. Also, we want to create jobs for local residents who are unemployed because of the cyclical nature of the tourist industry."

He said one goal of the committee is to bring businesses here that would hire young people from Hartnell and Monterey Peninsula colleges. Ideally, he said, this would be a company that would grow a great deal after it comes to the peninsula. "There wouldn't be much of an impact on water use or traffic because most of the employees are already here," Noseworthy said.

The committee devotes a good deal of its time to finding out what problems are perceived — perhaps not accurately — by companies which consider a move to this area. One is "a hostile political environment," described by Noseworthy as a belief that the peninsula doesn't want any more business here. Another is that there isn't any place for them to go. Noseworthy countered the latter by pointing to the 150,000 sq. ft. available at the former Cambridge Plan headquarters, and available space at the Ryan Ranch.

What can the new committee do about these misconceptions?

"We sent a team to Sacramento to talk to the economic development department there. They were amazed; they thought the peninsula was nothing but golf courses."

An interesting approach to the problem of affordable housing has been advanced by the committee. "I don't know if we'll ever have 'affordable housing' right here," Noseworthy said. "But we can promote the idea of finding such housing within a half hour's commute — in Watsonville, Castroville or Prunedale, for instance. That's a lot better than the commute for most workers in Silicon Valley."

Noseworthy concluded by saying that the committee is also approaching business editors of major newspapers throughout the county to invite them to come to the peninsula to see what is here. "Not the travel writers!" he emphasized. Plans also are being developed to train local workers, upgrading them from technical status to that of engineers.

CREDIT WHERE CREDIT IS DUE

Two weeks ago in this column, we told you about the fine gift given to the Bach Festival by calligrapher Susan Merwin. Susan called back to ask us to identify her teacher, and described her as "a wonderful teacher! She is the kind of teacher who inspires confidence in beginners."

That would be Patty Walden, who teaches calligraphy for the adult education program in Pacific Grove High School.

COMINGS AND GOINGS

If you thought you saw a huge whale swimming down Del Monte Avenue from Sand City to Monterey recently, you were right! It was the life-sized model of a 42-foot female whale going to its permanent home in the new Monterey Bay Aquarium. It is so big the move had to be made before the front doors of the aquarium were installed.

Aquarium officials guarantee an earlier opening date than the originally announced November one. Education director Steve Webster told a group of student "guides" (including many from Carmel) that they can count on being put to work Oct. 20.

In preparation for that long-awaited event, the aquarium already is pumping raw sea water into the huge tanks that will house the many live exhibits.

Granite Rock uncertain on Pico Blanco appeal

By JOE LIVERNOIS

GRANITE ROCK CO. officials have not yet decided whether they will appeal a ruling by a federal district court judge last week that could seriously restrict mining activities on Pico Blanco.

The judge, William Schwarzer, ruled Granite Rock will have to obtain Coastal Commission permits for its mining activities on the federally owned portion of Pico Blanco.

Schwarzer made his decision less than five days after a legion of Granite Rock attorneys and California Deputy Attorney General Linus Masouredis pleaded their cases before the court May 18.

The judgment was a disappointment to Granite Rock officials, including attorney James Heisinger, who said: "Now we're subject to two masters."

But the decision was termed "a major breakthrough" by Saunders Hillyer, executive director of the environmentally oriented Big Sur Foundation.

Heisinger, a Carmel Valley attorney who represented one of four law firms that argued

'But in this day and age, the government is more concerned with regulatory activities to protect the environment. The judge said that we are not going to look at 110-year-old acts that no longer apply. That era has passed.'

on behalf of Granite Rock, told the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook "a decision on whether to appeal hasn't been made yet."

If an appeal is made, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco would consider the case.

Heisinger said the decision, if not overturned, would force the company, which owns Pico Blanco property and has perfected mining claims for adjacent federal land, to obtain a state coastal permit for its mining activities on the federal land.

The company mines high-grade limestone from Pico Blanco, located between the southern and northern fork of the Little Sur River, for a variety of uses.

Environmentalists maintain that the mountain, which they consider a landmark peak, should be protected from heavy mining operations.

Heisinger said the company obtained permission from the United States Forestry Department to mine on the federal land in 1981.

At the time, he said, the Coastal Commission was given an opportunity to petition the forestry department to ensure that the federal permit is consistent with Coastal Commission provisions.

"But the state dropped the ball," Heisinger said.

THEN, IN OCTOBER, the Coastal Commission informed Granite Rock officials they would have to apply for a state coastal permit for mining operations on federal land, he said.

In the past, "the final say on mining operations on federal land was with the federal government," he said. If Schwarzer's decision stands, "now we're subject to two masters."

Masouredis told the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook he believes the case is "the first time the court has considered the relationship" between the Federal Mining Act of 1872 and the Coastal Commission. "It's a very significant decision," he said.

Both Masouredis and Heisinger said Schwarzer's 29-page decision says, in essence, that since Granite Rock has full use of the federal property and the federal government no longer has sole discretion over the property, Granite Rock activities on the property should be subject to state Coastal Commission regulations.

"The federal government has title to that property in name only," Masouredis said. "Granite Rock was hiding behind a federal shield."

Masouredis said the federal mining act encouraged mining on federal lands where valuable minerals are found by allowing unlimited use of the property.

To obtain a perfected claim to such lands, he said, mining operators pay the federal government $5 an acre for rights to the property which, in essence, practically gives operators full ownership.

"But in this day and age, the government is more concerned with regulatory activities to protect the environment," he said. "The judge said that we are not going to look at 110-year-old acts that no longer apply. That era has passed."

Heisinger admitted Granite Rock fought the Coastal Commission insistence that a coastal permit be sought because state coastal regulations are more severe than federal policies. "You really can't blame them," Hillyer said.

Heisinger added that the judge said the Coastal Commission cannot flatly deny a permit to Granite Rock for its mining operations but it can "condition the heck out of it."

HE SAID THE ramifications of Schwarzer's decision may be "precedential for mining claims throughout the (California) coastal zone and, for that matter, for all other types of activity on federal lands."

"We were hypothesizing about it yesterday and coming up with a lot of different cases," Heisinger said. "What about the guy with a hot dog stand on Fort Ord? The judge's decision might be so far-reaching that it could affect him."

Under provisions of the California Coastal Act, the Coastal Commission has jurisdiction over most permits for development until individual counties in the coastal zone get commission certification of local coastal programs.

The Big Sur Land Use Plan, the boundaries of which include Pico Blanco, has been adopted by the Monterey County Board of Supervisors and must be certified by the commission.

But even after the Big Sur plan is certified, the county must receive Coastal Commission certification of an implementation program for all its coastal plans before it assumes jurisdiction over the coastal permit process.

Hillyer said the decision by Schwarzer is vindication of a report issued by The Big Sur Foundation early last year that insisted the Coastal Commission — and, eventually, Monterey County — does have permit jurisdiction over activities on the federal land mined by Granite Rock.

CONSCIENCE OF CARMEL
BY GUNNAR NORBERGI'll vote for Brunn

"They know not what they do."

SOMETIMES it is only a maxim or an aphorism or a proverb which can reach into the consciousness of caring people who will not remember the extraordinary attractions which led them to this rare, world-acknowledged Shangri-La.

And when only a set of conventional and commonplace actions are to be used to protect the Carmel-related areas from the pressures applied by unconcerned and unfeeling developers, there can be no hope for any long-run blunting of the mindless advance of destructive bulldozers.

All of this effort to focus and capsulize the thinking of concerned and caring Carmelites centered itself in my mind as I listened to the five candidates for the single position of Fifth District County Supervisor when they spoke at a Sunset Center forum provided by the Carmel Citizens Committee.

After each candidate had made his or her opening statement, there was a question-and-answer period, though an unusually shortened one. When, just before 9 p.m., this question-and-answer period was about to be terminated, I asked what had happened to the written question which I had wanted asked, the moderator said it had simply become time to close the meeting and that in any event the candidates had essentially covered the issues.

My question was a straightforward one: Would any of the candidates be willing to oppose construction of the proposed Hatton Canyon Freeway?

In their opening statements, their responses to audience questions, or in their brief rebuttals, three of the candidates had indeed made very plain their positions on the long-disputed plan to desecrate the still-wooded Hatton Canyon with a monster freeway which could only be the crushing preamble to the destruction not only of Carmel Valley but also of all the other Carmel-related areas up and down the coast.

Those three candidates — Neill Gardner, Dortha Roesler, and Edwin Lee — clearly said they approve the plan to build a freeway in the Hatton Canyon. The other two candidates — Howard Brunn and Karin Strasser Kauffman — had not specifically taken a stand on the proposed Hatton Canyon highway at the meeting, though they had at other meetings, seemed to say that they also favored the Hatton Canyon route.

In my written question that was never put to the candidates, I wanted to hear directly from each one just where he or she stood just two weeks before the June 5 election on the Hatton Canyon proposition. This proposal, during the past quarter century, has been successfully resisted every time desecration of the Carmel environment seemed to rise up as an ogre to threaten the doom of an area blessed both by nature and by man.

Because I have felt and still feel — as so many thousands of dedicated Carmelites also feel — that a destroyed Hatton Canyon lined with freeway concrete and marked by huge interchanges at both ends could be the single most destructive threat to the Carmel area, I wanted to hear exactly where each and every candidate stood on the Hatton Canyon freeway menace.

WITHOUT straight answers from the two candidates who did not directly take stands on the Hatton Canyon freeway plan — Howard Brunn and Karin Strasser Kauffman — I must now try to determine which one of those two should be my choice when I vote June 5. And the choice is not simple or easy.

In her brochure, Karin Strasser Kauffman expressed herself on the matter of growth, when she said she favored only "growth planned to meet the needs of local residents, not to serve the ambitions of special interests." She also expressed herself on the question of responsive government when she identified such a government as one which "listens to the people it serves" and which gives "a fair hearing to all sides on controversial issues."

Such statements have often been expressed by candidates who seek election even though they have been quickly forgotten once they've been elected, but I believe that Karin Kauffman is sincere in her intent to remember them and to act upon them if she were to become the next Fifth District county supervisor.

In the question-and-answer period at the meeting to which I've referred, Karin Kauffman — along with the other candidates — was asked what her views were about the kind of county affairs which should demand her primary attention if she were elected. She replied that her first and primary focus would be upon the "human services" which the county is called upon to perform. Such services cover a wide range, and a substantial part of them concern "senior citizens."

In her brochure, she says she would seek an emphasis on "greater concern and effort by county government to meet our needs for affordable housing, jobs for young people, services for our elderly, recreation for our children, and less expensive health care for everyone."

In addition to this primary focus on "human services," Karin Kauffman said in the meeting that "land use issues" are "very important" and that attention to them would have a very high priority with her.

In his reply to the same audience question — the one which asked which of the county affairs would get each candidate's top attention — Howard Brunn said unequivocally that the "land use" issues would take center stage with him. And in his brochure he said "growth is necessary and desirable," something to which I have frequently taken exception, but then he added: "But not when (growth) is uncontrolled, and especially when outside interests call the shots."

He also added that "while on the Carmel City Council, (he) led, and helped win, many fights against random development in the Carmel Valley," and I know that that is true because I was mayor at the time when those legal battles were successfully fought.

As many readers may remember, Howard Brunn and I were not always agreed on matters upon which the Carmel City took action at the time when both he and I served together. And some readers might also think that what I've just said would certainly be an understatement about some of the disagreements we had.

Before he became a Carmel city councilman, Howard Brunn served as vice president of the Odello Land Acquisition Fund, which raised some $350,000 and helped interest the State Parks Service in the acquisition of all of that portion of the Odello artichoke fields located between Highway 1 and the ocean.

At the same time I was vice president of the Carmel Area Coalition, which was engaged in the effort to discourage Prudential Life through various subsidiaries and affiliations from locating a massive tourist-oriented development on the Odello farm property. This would have included two large hotels, one on each side of Highway 1, near the south shore of the Carmel River, neither of which has been built.

Much else could be said about Karin Strasser Kauffman's views and those of Howard Brunn, and about their sincerity and about their qualifications and about their community activities, but what I have put down here are the points to which I have given much thought in recent weeks and months.

And my conclusion has finally become that I will vote June 5 for Howard Brunn, even though that decision was neither easily nor quickly reached.

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

About 20 million Americans, or 10 percent of the nation's population, are over age 65. There are approximately four women for every three men. A higher proportion of senior citizens than of younger people live in rural areas, small towns and the older sections of large cities. About 70 percent of older Americans own their own homes. Nearly 25 percent live with their children, but the majority prefer not to. Another 25 percent, mostly those widowed, live alone or with people not their relatives.

High blood pressure, called the "silent killer" because it often shows no discernible symptoms, is a risk which millions of older people face. If you'd like to know more about the condition and its treatment, send for the new, updated version of a well-known pamphlet called "Watch Your Pressure" that contains the latest medical findings. Send 50 cents for postage and handling to the Public Affairs Committee, Dept. FB-BP, 381 Park Avenue South, New York, NY 10016.

Remember When? 1958 — Do you recall the song hits that were popular that year? Among the favorites were "I Believe," "Doggie In The Window," "Till I Waltz Again With You," and "I'm Walking Behind You."

School board sharpens its budgetary scalpel

THERE ARE no sacred cows in my book."

With that statement, Trustee Jim Yates probably best explained the position of the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education toward potential program cuts to balance the 1984-85 budget.

Money was uppermost in the minds of trustees during their regular meeting May 29 at Captain Cooper School in Big Sur.

Three major information items before the board involved money, or rather the lack of it — budget "assumptions" for increased revenues, the high school athletic program, and a possible home-to-school busing fee.

Although no official action was taken, it appears that trustees will be forced to adopt an annual $50 per student busing fee to offset the $45,000 difference between state income and the cost of the transportation program.

"It's not something we relish doing," Supt. William Rand said.

Board President Robert Fenton said he is against a busing fee, but would be forced to vote for it unless "miracle money" comes from Sacramento.

"Personally I don't want to charge a fee if we don't have to. It doesn't taste good to me," Fenton said.

Rand's proposed system envisions that the district would charge $25 per student per semester with a maximum $62.50 per semester per family.

Bus passes would be issued to secondary students. For the first two weeks, aides would keep records of the elementary students to give bus drivers a chance to learn who has paid to ride, Rand proposed.

No action was taken on the busing fee. It probably will be brought back to the board for review during budget hearings this summer.

The budget also played a role in board discussion of the high school athletic program, which costs the district about $71,000 annually. The remainder of the approximately $118,000 annual budget is generated from donations and gate receipts.

The board wants Rand and athletic director Monty Feekes to push harder for a realignment of the leagues so games are played closer to home to reduce transportation costs.

"There are no sacred cows in my book," Yates said.

No action was taken on the athletic report.

In his "budget assumptions" report to the board, business manager Ed Miyasaki explained that several changes in anticipated income have netted the district an additional $190,000.

The extra income is generated from the assumed additional money from the state and federal governments ($42,500), reduction of two extra teaching positions ($64,000), and transportation fee ($45,000).

But the "balanced" $6.7 million budget does not include funds for a reserve (usually $100,000) and staff pay raises ($50,000 for each 1 percent across-the-board salary hike).

Trustee Doyle Clayton also proposed an immediate hiring and spending freeze in the district. However, he was told that as of May 9 all schools had been told to stop most purchases.

At the beginning of the meeting, Rand told the audience that the board does not intend to review the status of Captain Cooper School until next year.

There has been some concern that the school may be closed because of the expected loss in enrollment next fall or the year after.

The Naval Station at Point Sur is to be "phased out" next year, Rand said. About 15 Captain Cooper students live at the Navy base.

Council to meet May 31

Carmel City Council members will discuss the possible extension of business district boundaries in the city when they meet at 4 p.m. May 31 in city hall.

The council will consider the extension, which would move the business district boundaries to Fifth and Sixth avenues, after it agreed last week to add new motels to the city.

Discussion of new motels and a larger commercial district come as the council attempts to hammer out implementing ordinances to the new Carmel General Plan.

At a special 4 p.m. session May 24, the city council included language in the general plan that would mean new motels could be built only in the new residential commercial district on the outskirts of the business district.

The new motels could not take up more than half of a city block and only one motel unit would be allowed per 1,000 square feet.

The ordinance is in direct conflict with a general plan policy which bans motels, but the city planning staff said that "overall, the ordinance is in conformance with the general plan and therefore the (planning) commission is recommending adoption."

Carmel City Atty. Donald Freeman agreed that the proposed ordinance includes conditions that would make the ordinance conform with the general plan.

Action taken by the council last week was not binding, but the advisory vote on motels — and other "housekeeping" items in the implementing ordinances — will all be considered by the city council on a first reading that could take place as early as May 31.

Discussion of the boundary extension for the business district will precede any first reading, however, according to Carmel City Administrator Douglas Schmitz.

Considerable testimony on the proposed extension of the business district boundaries was heard before the action by the city council last week.

Several merchants told the council the existing boundaries, which exclude some properties and include others within the boundaries of Seventh and Fourth avenues and Junipero Avenue and Monte Verde Street, could drive out businesses that are resident-oriented. Others said they believe the proposed zoning could force out existing businesses.

William Wunderlich has the experience and judicial temperament to be a great judge.

A message from William Wunderlich

On June 5th, the citizens of Monterey County will have the opportunity to choose their next Superior Court Judge. I am a candidate because I have seen how the appointment of judges, as a reward for political service, undermines respect for our courts.

As a prosecutor, I know justice can be denied by needless continuances and unwarranted delays. Inappropriate leniency breeds contempt for the law. The rights of victims and witnesses all too often are ignored.

As judge, I will work to correct these deficiencies. I pledge that my court will be open and responsive to the concerns of the entire community.

I will be a strong judge, committed to justice for all citizens and firmly dedicated to protecting not only the rights of the accused, but rights of victims, witnesses and jurors, as well.

Strolling the coals: good for the sole?

By ANNE PAPINEAU

FEAR — President Roosevelt warned us about it in the 1930s. By the 1950s fear became a spine-rattling monster that stalked movie theaters as The Tingler. (Don't worry, a scream halted the rubbery beast.)

But Americans are slow learners. Thus in the 1980s, Tolly Burkan battles fear in a very trendy and toasty way. He teaches firewalking.

Monday, May 21, Burkan brought his firewalking workshop to Carmel Valley. The contents of the workshop are copyrighted, he explained. Fees range from $50 for adults to $15 for children under age 16.

The ingredients of Burkan's fear-fighting recipe are simple yet dramatic. Build a big fire, let it settle to the red ember stage, start moving. No sneakers, sandals or wingtips allowed. Flesh meets embers. Do it and be cleansed.

The idea is, if you can walk across a bed of red-hot embers, facing the fears of the day will be no problem. You've a new weapon in your fear-fighting arsenal. The boogie man loses his punch.

According to Burkan, a resident of Twain Harte, Calif., he has led more than 8,000 fear-congested people over the coals. He's been doing it for a couple of years, he said, and will soon delegate the workshop instruction to his disciples. The current round of workshops is among his last.

An invitation to participate in this "firewalking workshop" led by Tolly Burkan himself, was one I could not pass up. As a journalist I have a lot of fears: fear of missing deadlines, fear of hatchet-wielding editors. That intersection where Highways 1 and 68 meet in Monterey always gives me the willies. This workshop meant more than a story. It was my ticket to fast-moving achievement, 1980s style.

The workshop began at about 7 p.m. in the open beamed living room of a Carmel Valley home. Signs guided participants to the firewalking workshop. Another one said "No Smoking."

No fake fires or trickery is employed. As Burkan expressed it: "The average fire we walk on is about 1,300 degrees Fahrenheit. The aluminum engine in my Datsun was poured at 1,100 degrees."

BLISTERED sole of the author bespeaks the difficulty of walking on embers despite completion of intense workshop. (Photograph by Joe Livernois.)

If a bathroom break is required, take one now. There will be no interruptions once the informational segment of the workshop begins.

Burkan exudes vitality. His brow is uncluttered, his voice forceful and enthusiasm-charged. He wears a white shirt and sandy-colored corduroy bellbottoms. He says he has conquered fear and cancer.

As advised, we introduce ourselves and our fears. Burkan acknowledges that speaking before a group is categorized as one of the greatest terrors of man.

It turns out that among the folks clustered on chairs and cushions around the room are people of varied ages, genders and attitudes: mothers and sons, employers and employees, the brave and the fearful.

Some have travelled from other counties for this experience. The 10 who wear nametags are novices in the art of leading firewalking workshops. According to a flyer distributed by Burkan, cost of the firewalking leader course is $1,000.

To be honest, a firewalking workshop is a very subjective experience. Burkan makes note of this fact. The images of fear and fire that flash through my mind are indeed personal.

Firewalking summons newsreel images of the self-immolation protest of a monk during the Vietnam war. I recall the charred chicken that was my forearm following a childhood accident.

The first three hours of the workshop are essentially a Burkan-directed pep talk. He and his associates outline fear-fighting points in felt pen. "Pay attention" and "go for it" are key phrases. An effective part of the ritual is the firebuilding.

Like a well-ordered herd we file outdoors and do as directed — construct a ring of oak logs and kindling. The fire is ignited. No talking, please.

HERE ARE repeat walkers at this workshop. People deliver testimony that asserts the firewalking experience opened up both minds and lives. One participant suggests that he firewalked in a past life.

According to Burkan, some people have been injured seriously at his workshops. One woman, he explains, made the mistake of pausing mid-walk. She was hospitalized for weeks, her skin "flaked like blackened leaves."

No one is cajoled or required to walk if they do not want to. Burkan says these participants derive as much benefit from the workshop as those who choose to walk.

Well into the lecture period, Burkan gives a slight-of-hand demonstration. Like a magic show, he invites help from the audience as he performs tricks with cotton balls, cards, scarves and rope.

At approximately 10 p.m., both fire and participants are deemed ready. A leader explains dos and don'ts: don't run, but don't stop either. Assume a purposeful stride. Shatter that membrane of fear.

Feet bared, pant legs rolled up, we stride purposefully into the night air en masse. What had been mossy logs is now a shimmering pile of red coals. Hands link in a circle around the pyre. We sing as guided. The assistant rakes the heap flat into a thick runway of brightly glowing embers.

The reality rush is overpowering. Even as I stand on its outskirts, the heat of the fire is intense. The assistant temporarily blocks the waves of heat when he stands before you to smooth his work. When he steps away, the warmth of the embers again radiates outward.

The assistant leads the pack by walking the glittering runway as though it were shag carpet. One, two, three steps and it's over. If there is something hypnotic about looking at fire, watching people walk on it is even more entrancing.

One at a time, people break from the circle and take their turn at the fire. Some pause at its edge as though in prayer. Some step as though they were barefoot on a sidewalk in El Centro. As walkers traverse the glowing pathway, embers sometimes lodge between toes. These are squirted with a hose artfully aimed by the observant assistant as individual walks conclude.

PARTICIPANTS pay in advance. There were about 30 the evening I attended. Everyone must sign a release that states they will not hold Burkan responsible if any injury is sustained at the firewalking workshop. The workshop does not start until everyone has submitted a release form.

Burkan encourages his audience to relax while he plucks out tunes on an acoustic guitar. The actual coal-strolling is three hours off. There is singing and hand-clapping. Shades of the Campfire Girls.

View surfside of Highway 1 Skybound tour offers fresh perspectives

FOR THOSE who wonder how many mansions dot the surfside of Highway 1 or what it's like to look down at Bixby Creek Bridge, a birds' eye tour of the Monterey Peninsula can satisfy that curiosity.

Both residents and visitors alike take wing on the Monterey Peninsula for numerous reasons. Terje Kristiansen, director of flight operations for AAR Del Monte, Inc., one of the pilots behind the joystick at this Monterey Peninsula Airport-housed flight company, is accustomed to following passengers' whims.

According to Kristiansen, he regularly takes up homebuyers who want to examine real estate, mourners who supervise a burial at sea, whale watchers or simply the out-of-towner who would like an eyeful of the peninsula in just 30 minutes.

"A guy came here from New York. He wanted to build a cliff house for a customer," Kristiansen noted. "We spent hours scouting cliff houses. He spent thousands photographing them with video equipment."

Passengers usually have a good idea of what they want to see, he explained. As in taxi travel, the planes, typically four-place high wing single engine Cessna 172s, have a running meter on board. Customers are charged in tenths of an hour. A half-hour flight is a commonly requested tour length.

The Monterey Peninsula has many specific restrictions regarding scenic flight. Much of the airspace above Fort Ord is forbidden territory. Several thousand acres of brushland on the U.S. Army base are the site of practice mortar fire.

Pilots who travel the Monterey Peninsula must bear in mind that they should remain close enough to shoreline so the plane can glide to land in the event of engine failure. "Sometimes if we go out to sea we take flares and life jackets," he said.

The position of Monterey Peninsula Airport itself presents a challenge because of the topographical features that surround it.

"It's strange in that we have a lot of mountains to the south, the ocean is west and then there's Fort Ord. Salinas (airport) does not have these restrictions," the pilot said.

A popular tourist flight, he pointed out, is to take off from Monterey Peninsula Airport and follow the coastline south. "We cannot go below 1,000 feet over the California Sea Otter Game Refuge," Kristiansen said. "The area is restricted from Point Lobos to past San Simeon. Of course, the rocks look a little menacing when you get lower."

The Monterey Peninsula from the air presents a striking vision even to passengers who know the area well. Kristiansen, who retains a touch of his native Norway in his speech, urges riders to relax as the small plane travels toward the sea from the airport.

Within 30 seconds after takeoff, Fisherman's Wharf flashes into view. The yet unopened Monterey Bay Aquarium is

THEATER REVIEW

BY JEAN THURMAN

Studio Theatre has a winner

THE STUDIO Theatre has realized its potential with a highly entertaining production of Agatha Christie's The Mousetrap. The audience opening night was fascinated, and enthusiastically discussed clues during intermission and dissected the plot afterwards.

The classic whodunnit is set in an old manor house that has been newly re-established as an inn. The young proprietors and their peculiar guests are snowed in and cut off from civilization when a policeman arrives to investigate a murder. Each character becomes a potential murderer and a potential victim, and suspicions and tempers mount rapidly.

Director Peter Magee makes the most of the humor in the play by setting a madcap, farcical pace and emphasizing the broad comedy in the characters. Once in a while, this gets out of hand. Some of the characters anticipate each other's lines, so reactions are lost, and often lines are stepped on. But for the most part the pace keeps the audience caught between breathless expectation and howls of laughter.

The spirited cast members work well together and obviously enjoy themselves. There are several new faces who are welcome additions to the sometimes overly familiar Studio casts. Samantha Pratt as Mollie, the young wife, has exceptional poise and presence, especially since she is still a high school student, and has an ear-piercing scream that is most unsettling.

Jonathon Seydel, as her husband Giles, fares less well. His expressions range from a slight pout to a fierce sulk, and he is the worst offender in rushing his lines. He and Miss Pratt do not complement each other, but he can be very good with some of the other cast members.

The odd assortment of guests of the manor include Christopher Wren, a disturbed yet charming architect; Miss Casewell, a strong-minded woman of mysterious background; Major Metcalf, a mild mannered officer from overseas; Paravacini, a boisterous Italian; and Mrs. Boyle, a cantankerous old dame.

Mrs. Boyle was to be played by Rene Hoffman, who was called away due to a death in the family, but the part was quite capably read by Florence Larsen, with minimal disturbance to the smoothness of the play.

Christopher Forsythe as Christopher was wildly funny, especially in his initial appearance when he declared which furniture was authentic and which fake. His costumes were wonderfully atrocious. Although he is obviously disturbed, it is clear why Mollie is fond of him.

Deborah Coulter plays a very strident Miss Casewell, with a tough demeanor and a horse laugh. She and Jeff Hudelson as Paravacini come very close to playing parodies of their characters. Although they are both good, and Hudelson is very funny, they could be quite a bit subtler.

Major Metcalf is the most slightly drawn of the characters. The most that can be said for him early on is that he seems nice enough. Phillip Pratt injects enough of the eccentric into the part by the second act to make the character interesting.

Richard Myroth plays the part of Seargent Trotter, the investigator, with a great deal of authority, and acts at times as the master of ceremonies in this three-ring circus. The actors constantly pop in one door and out another, go up one set of stairs and down the other, turn lights and radios off and on and generally cause chaos.

In a show as physically complicated as this one, properties and set can be a nightmare. When they work as well as these do, though, they add inestimably to the production. The furnishings are substantial and attractive, and everything works as it is supposed to. Firelight flickers, lights turn on by their switches, the radio plays on cue, and the draperies can be drawn.

Peter Magee and Robert Gregory are responsible for the impressive set and the show is ably run by George Hoffman and Tig Dupre.

The Mousetrap plays at the Studio Theatre Restaurant in Carmel Thursdays through Sundays through July 14.

MUSIC CORNER

BY SCOTT MACLELLAND

I Cantori an artistic treasure

I CANTORI di Carmel does more than achieve high standards and real artistic success. It inspires. On Saturday night at the Carmel Mission, the group proved once again that quality art demands discipline of both intention and execution. In this regard, I Cantori leaves the competition far behind, even though numbers include members of other local choral efforts.

But to know conductor Sal Ferrantelli is to recognize that he is competing not with other choirs, but with those choral vagaries that keep singers from getting it right with the composer. He has single-handedly breathed a living spirit into the great choral tradition that we have otherwise witnessed only at the Bach Festival.

And yet, Ferrantelli remains humble, and still a bit anxious about choir capabilities. He is skeptical that I Cantori is ready for Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, for example. But until now, no one could even have considered such a project. Or, more to the point, I Cantori has grown such that things could realistically be done with the Monterey County Symphony, and with predictably good results. For that matter, I Cantori would not have to expand much beyond 50 members for such as Missa Solemnis, if the power and clarity exhibited last Saturday (and in earlier concerts) hold true.

The above references to Beethoven's great Solemn Mass are not idle. I Cantori's readiness was sufficiently proved in Saturday's performance of that composer's Mass in C — not as grand an opus as the Mass in D Minor — but neither a simple nor easy piece to sing. The Mass in C, like the later work, includes many of the rhythm difficulties and chromatic dissonances that Beethoven used for dramatic effects, and many of its numbers contrast soft passages for solo quartet with both soft and loud choral moments and outbursts, requiring a deft sense of balance and timing from the director.

I Cantori had gotten plenty warm during the preceding Bach cantata, Gottes Zeit, and achieved a sparkling new vitality with each succeeding movement of the large and mercurial Beethoven. The sheer power, coupled with articulate clarity, that studded the reading easily rode over the 33-piece orchestra. The final fugue of the Gloria, for example, was thrilling in its vitality and its accumulating energy. No less effective were the quiet moments in which the choir distinguished itself for sustained intensity at pianissimo volume.

The solo quartet were Velvali de Ayxa, Linda Purdy, David O'Dell and Reg Huston. Mezzo Purdy and bass Huston provided the strong foundation that supported the lighter production of soprano Ms. de Ayxa and O'Dell. Tenor O'Dell was a bit careless with notes and good support, but overall the soloists maintained good standards. The orchestra was refreshingly free from the amateurisms of rhythm and intonation that have tended to dog pickup orchestras heard in other choral projects around here. The winds and horns also made a classy impression.

In some respects, Bach's Gottes Zeit made a finer impression, owing largely to the degree of fine detail of execution demanded by the piece and exhibited by the musical resources. The sense of scale remained more in evidence even though the choir did not come into flush until the latter half of the second full chorus.

Flutists Ray Fabrizio and Karen King gave sweet sureness to the charmingly naive sinfonia that opened the work, and the strings set the good tone for the evening. The opening chorus needed more confidence and bite, and the smallish tenor section appeared weak and unsupported there and in the next number (for tenors alone) though time worked in their favor. Likewise, the basses, in the next number, were soft and tentative.

The fugue on Komm, Jesum, komm proved the turning point, as tone flowered, dynamics grew more vivid, and articulation found new certainty and purpose.

JAZZ NOTES

BY ROBERT MISKIMON

Magical musical trio

THREE UNIQUELY talented jazz artists brought their gifts of creativity, spontaneity, and sensitivity to the stage of Sunset Theater last Wednesday.

If you were among the sold-out house who heard the musical phrasings of saxist Charles Lloyd, pianist Michel Petrucciani, and vocalist Bobby McFerrin, you don't need to be reminded that it was a special and enchanted evening.

This unusual trio presented a distillation of pure jazz forms in their own distinct style that almost pioneered a new musical art form. Theirs is a shared musical stream-of-consciousness that explores hidden and wondrous corners of jazz.

Without a rhythm section, these three artists managed to convey enough of the lyricism, pathos, and exuberance of jazz — whether Kansas City blues or post-bebop experimentation — to encompass the entire musical idiom. Their ideas and musical presences seemed to fuse in a seamless, endless whole.

Michel Petrucciani is the French pianist whose style is somewhat reminiscent of Bill Evans, and perhaps Bud Powell. He plays with soaring imagination, interwoven phrases, and a faultless sense of syncopation. His "Round Midnight" solo was a rare treat; it took the listener to many midnights and many varied moods.

Charles Lloyd is the accomplished tenor sax and flute player whose years of experience with the Chico Hamilton and Cannonball Adderly bands carried him to the pinnacle of jazz fame, and who has lived quietly in Big Sur for the last decade. His close association with Petrucciani produced some moments of real beauty in Wednesday's concert.

Lloyd demonstrated an intensely personal lyricism and latent swingmatism in his playing which was infectious. His control over his instrument and sensitivity to the other musicians was at all times in evidence.

Vocalist Bobby McFerrin held the audience in thrall with his unusual and unpredictable musical output. McFerrin uses his voice like a musical instrument, like an entire rhythm section, like a human voice raised in anguish — all at once.

At times, he creates the sounds that might come from a radio tuned to a distant, wavering broadcast that slides in and out of consciousness on a hot summer night — the broadcast is a young Sarah Vaughan scat singing with Jimmy Rushing. McFerrin takes the listener on a strange journey through the subconsciousness of jazz, a James Joycean tour of the underbelly of bop.

Although with this group it's sometimes hard to place a name or label on what they're doing, distinct passages could be made out from "Sweet Georgia Brown," "Body and Soul," and "Round Midnight" among the astral journey through musical time and space.

The concert at Sunset Center was a sheer delight. Jazz fans can only hope that more will be heard from the Lloyd/Petrucciani/McFerrin contingent, and that Sunset Center will continue its presentation of unusual jazz fare.

From 'Synthesis' to sand sculpture

Multi-media show bows in P.G.

A MULTITUDE of media distinguishes the newest show at the Pacific Grove Art Center, 568 Lighthouse Ave., Pacific Grove. The exhibits open to the public Saturday, June 2. Gallery hours are 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays until July 7.

In the Main Gallery, a combination exhibit will present paintings by Carmel Valley artist Todd Friedlander and sculptures by Eric Lintala.

A full-time artist for more than a decade, Friedlander has shown his work in both California and the Midwest. Locally, his paintings have been exhibited at Sunset Center, Carmel; the Monterey Conference Center and the Collector's Gallery in Pacific Grove.

The Synthesis exhibit brings into balanced synthesis a number of polarities. A harmonious equilibrium is sought between geometric and organic, order and chaos, strong overall impact and subtle detail. Color is a crucial aspect of the work.

"Creation is very much an internal exploration," explained the artist, "one which must be carried ever deeper with the highest integrity. It is deep within that I not only find my true self, but also the strands which unite us all."

"By translating thoughts and feelings from this space into paintings, I present a mirror in which the viewer can examine his or her own core emotions and mental states."

In his works, Friedlander allows the eyes, heart and mind of his viewers to experience an unfettered freedom in a luxuriously abundant abstract space. This encourages a calm, meditative state of reflection.

Sharing the gallery with the Friedlander paintings will be sculptures of sand by Eric Lintala, an instructor in sculpture at Swain School of Design in New Bedford, Mass.

Recipient of a sculpture commission special recognition for outdoor environmental work, Lintala has a M.F.A. degree in sculpture from Kent State University, Kent, Ohio. He has lectured and taught since 1976.

The Lintala works are dominated by a feeling of solitude and foreboding like the ruins of past civilizations. Sand is used as a time element. It flows over the figures to conceal and change the face and identity of them.

Workshop graduates open June exhibit at Foundation

WORKS by members of an advanced experimental workshop offered by UFM/Quest will be displayed during the month of June at the Carmel Foundation Gallery.

The artists are Phyllis Pederson, Saima Sailer, Joyce Lewis and Mary Reynolds of Carmel and Sandra Eckhart of Salinas.

The workshop is under the direction of Lewis Kesling, who also serves as art director for the Carmel Foundation artist of the month exhibits.

The works are entirely of an experimental nature, and strive to solve specific design problems and teach composition and color theory through the media of paint and collage in new and unorthodox ways.

All works shown will be abstract in style. Most are done in paper collage with some painting involved.

Gallery hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays and 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. weekends. The Carmel Foundation is at Lincoln and Eighth, Carmel. For more information, call 624-1588.

Tularcitos students lauded

Four Tularcitos School students received special awards recently.

Third grader Roe Sandoval and fifth grader Angie Rutherford won first prizes in the Monterey County Office of Education art contest held as part of public schools week.

Third grader Elizabeth Garner was a runner-up and won a $5 gift certificate and tickets to Marriot's.

Another Tularcitos prize winner was second grader Navarre Bautista, who won first place in the Del Monte Shopping Center Mother's Day essay contest.

Her entry was displayed and printed in the local daily newspaper.

...firewalking explained

I APPROACH my walk as though it is a story I dread writing. Concentrate and get moving. It is like standing in a bathtub of dry ice — a dry, searing burn. Embers make a crunching noise, but — one, two, three — it's over.

The assistant gives me my shot of hose water. I rejoin the circle. My feet feel suitably scorched.

Talking is forbidden. Then the assistant dowses our runway with the much-used hose. Gray smoke rises in the night. It is time to go inside.

Later, as we all kneel to practice an acupressure technique to relieve pain, I notice a lot of little white blisters on otherwise unscathed feet. My feet rarely see the light of day, much less a six-foot barbecue. They feel as though they are still resting on that now-extinguished blaze.

My feet smart so badly on the drive home I begin to rethink my initially positive reactions toward the workshop. Burkan maintains that those who sustain injury had not concentrated, that when properly focused the brain emits a chemical that protects the soles of the feet.

My feet hurt something dreadful. I use burn spray, take some aspirin and sleep with a blue ice bag on my soles. Surprisingly, my bubble-coated soles feel fine the next day. Perhaps I am a better student than I think — blisters on your instep tell a tale on you.

Carmel Art Association selects a quartet of member/artists

FOUR ARTISTS were selected as provisional members of the Carmel Art Association after a May 8 meeting of the board of directors. Each applicant had to submit six paintings, a group of drawings and an art biography.

Of 16 applicants, the four chosen are Olaf Dahlstrand, Beva Farmer, Randy Puckett and William Hannum.

Artist and architect Olaf Dahlstrand has painted for 45 years. His bachelor of arts degree includes a minor in art. During the 1960s Dahlstrand received awards for work in graphics. At the Monterey County Fair he received Award of Merit in watercolor in 1980 and 1981. He received first prize in 1976 from the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History during its annual competitive exhibit of watercolors. This is an important show among local splashes in watercolor, the Carmel Art Association stated.

Beva Farmer studied at Dominican College under Ann O'Hanlon. Her other instructors included Churia Obata of the University of California at Berkeley, Victor Ries of Marin Junior College, Lloyd Reynolds of Reed College and Sister Loyola Mary Harman of Marylhurst.

Mrs. Farmer is on the board of the Monterey History and Art Association and is a member of the Western Society of Italic Handwriting. Her paintings have been shown at Village Artistry and the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History Annual Watercolor Exhibit.

Salinas sculptor Randy Puckett was voted in as a member. His work has been exhibited at the Highlands Gallery of Sculpture and the Mystic Maritime Gallery in Mystic, Conn. He was awarded first prize for sculpture at the 1981 Malibu Festival and received an award for excellence at the 1983 Mystic International, Mystic Seaport Museum.

William Hannum was invited into membership as a graphic artist. He studied at the Art Students' League in New York City and at the Otis Art Institute in Los Angeles. Hannum is a member of the Marin County Art Association. At the Monterey County Fair he received three awards of merit for graphics. His work is shown at the L'Orangerie Gallery in Laguna Beach.

Big Sur coast inspired fine hand-thrown porcelains

THE VENTANA Store presents an afternoon with Big Sur artist Embree De Persis and her collection of fine art and utilitarian porcelains from noon to 5 p.m. Saturday, June 2.

Complimentary wine and hors d'oeuvres will be served from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the Ventana Store Courtyard, just off Highway 1 in Big Sur, 28 miles south of Carmel.

Embree De Persis created a line of hand-thrown fine art and kitchenware inspired by the striking beauty of the Big Sur coastal area. Utilizing a unique sense of color and form, she uses a scheme of pure white, cobalt blue and copper on her line of kitchenware.

The artist incorporates metal into her work with porcelain. Using gold, silver and titanium, she electrolytically alters the metal to produce multi-colored hues and integrates the metals into the porcelain design.

Ms. De Persis was graduated from McGill University in Montreal, Canada. She studied design with Hungarian-born artist Ilonka Karasz at the Design Studio in New York City and ceramics with Hopi potter Elizabeth White in Oraibi, Ariz.

In 1975 Ms. De Persis established her studio in Big Sur and began to work solely in the porcelain medium. Her technique involves each piece being hand-thrown on a potter's wheel, often several inches larger than the finished pieces due to the high shrinkage rate of porcelain clay.

Pieces are slowly dried, bisque-fired and then clear glaze is applied to emphasize the pure white of the porcelain. Cobalt, copper and rutile designs are airbrushed and painted on the surfaces, and glaze-fired to Cone 11 (2,399 degrees Fahrenheit). It is these high-fire techniques that produce the depth of color her work is known for.

Cherry Foundation accepts books

Donations will be accepted until Wednesday, June 6, for the annual book sale to benefit the Carl Cherry Foundation of Carmel.

A vintage 1870 map of San Francisco is among the treasures to be offered at the annual event from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, June 9 at Cherry Hall, Guadalupe and Fourth, Carmel.

Donations are tax deductible and may be left at Cherry Hall. Donations may be picked up by calling 624-7491.

The Helen Barker Gallery relocates to Barnyard in Carmel

THE HELEN Barker Gallery has moved from its Dolores Street location to the Barnyard, Highway 1 and Carmel Valley Road, Carmel. Her gallery is now near the entrance to the Succulent Garden.

Helen Barker's paintings reflect her versatility in the media of watercolor and oil. Her subjects include florals, seascapes, landscapes and still lifes. Her work has been described by many as "happy paintings."

Works by other painters and sculptors are displayed at the Helen Barker Gallery. Artists represented include her husband, Nick Le Feuvre, pen and ink drawings; Vern Yadon, watercolors of birds and mammals; Frieda Golding, abstract paintings from natural forms in watercolor and ink; Jack Bevier, watercolors of rural scenes; Suzanne Sable and Wah Chang, bronzes of animals and figures and Edwin Robinson, watercolors.

For more information about the Helen Barker Gallery, call 624-6712 or 624-4642. The gallery is open 10:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily.

another quickly spotted landmark, as is Point Pinos Lighthouse and Bird Rock off the 17 Mile Drive in Pebble Beach.

Picture windows, sweeping lawns and swimming pools never glimpsed when motorizing along 17 Mile Drive are clearly visible from this mid-air vantage point. During the winter months, as many as 80 to 100 California grey whales can be counted during a half-hour flight.

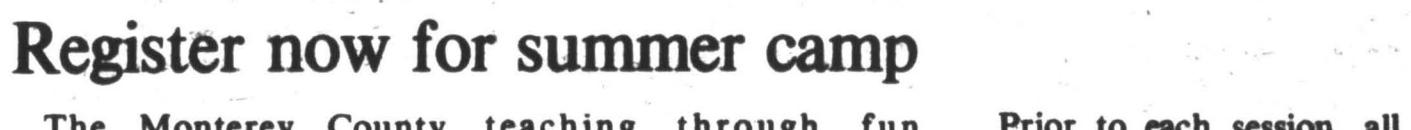

As the tiny plane continued its coastward journey, Kristiansen marveled at the seasonal delights of flight along the peninsula. In spring, certain meadows present a brilliant splash of colors as wildflowers come into bloom. Tourist landmarks are visible, but not the tourists. In the Big Sur country, cattle that rarely see vehicles of any kind graze undaunted while the little plane passes by.

The pilot suggested that riders prone to airsickness restrict their tour to less than an hour. Travelling at 120 m.p.h., a loop can be completed in that time that embraces the Monterey Peninsula from Pebble Beach to Point Lobos to Carmel Valley.

AAR Del Monte, Inc., charges $67 per hour for a four-seat airplane with pilot. The rate is the same whether three passengers ride or only one. The Monterey Peninsula Airport accommodates other charter services, as well. For those itching to put their hands on the controls, AAR also offers a 25-minute "discovery flight" for $20 in which the passenger actually gets to fly the airplane.

Register now for summer camp

The Monterey County SPCA is now accepting applications for its summer day camp program. To register their eight to 10-year-olds, parents can call the SPCA at 373-2631 or 422-4721.

Each of the four three-day camp sessions will cover pet care, local wildlife and the care of barnyard companion animals. SPCA humane educators will use the teaching through fun method.

It incorporates

films, art projects, outdoor games and hands-on animal

The camp is open only to children between the ages of eight and 10 who have not attended a session in years past.

Each session is limited to 20

children. Parents must

CARMEL POINT COMSTOCK

The owners have combined a country decor with the unique Carmel Comstock architecture for an outstanding look that gives one the feeling of "home." The exterior is California Cape Cod and this sparkling beauty is set 200 feet from the ocean in one of Carmel's most desirable neighborhoods. The first step into the tiled entryway is like entering a home in the French countryside. The random-peggued hardwood floors throughout and the vaulted ceiling add to the charm of the wallpaper, brass carriage lanterns and shuttered windows. This home has over 2000 square feet of living area and is located with storage space and extras. It has three bedrooms, 2 baths, formal dining room, den, wet bar, glassed in carport, and there is a peek of the ocean from the master bedroom. The large brick patio offers more storage space, a fountain, and a gazebo, which is actually the laundry room. This home is in perfect condition but you must see it to appreciate it and it's priced at $525,000.
